She Will Continue to Grow Along Nature's Lines.

Charles Dudley Warner says in the current Harper's: No one any longer disputes the right of woman to the fullest development of her powers by the education to be got from books and from life. Just now it seems to be assumed that this education should be exactly the same as that given to men. This experiment is bound to be tried to the end. While it is in progress there will be extravagances of conduct. There will be women aping men in manners and in dress and losing the qualities that make women most lovely and agreeable to their own sex as well as to men, and there will be men who will declare that the education of women is a total mistake, because it is destructive to those feminine qualities and charms which make the world interesting and endurable. We have faith, however, that nature's laws are uniform, and that trees will continue to bear fruit of their kind. We have no fear that the educated woman will become only a man. She herself will be as fully conscious where her strength lies and in the end will take the kind of education best fitted to develop her feminine powers and best fitted to the duties that nature has imposed upon her. We have not got very far with general education yet, but no one doubts that the salvation of society depends upon it, or that in a well-balanced world the education of the one sex is as desirable as that of the other. To educate both alike might produce monotony and sacrifice some of the best qualities in each. A man, for instance, would be of small account if he owed his whole training to an old-fashioned female seminary, and it is quite believable that the higher education of women must include graces and accomplishments not suited to men and not in the curriculum now being tried for them.

Sometimes Stingy and Again Lavish With Her Creatures Giant and Pigmy Freaks—The Varied Proportions of Dogs, Chicks and Mankind.

The most interesting thing, perhaps, in connection with the poultry show held at Madison Square Garden, says the New York World, was the comparative size of the chickens exhibited. Most people who do not attend exhibitions of barn yard stock know nothing about the size of this most common of domesticated fowl other than is learned from a casual glance at a butcher's window.

There are chickens that weigh considerably more than the usual two, three or five pounds at 22 cents a pound. There are also chicks that tip the scales at 15 and 16 pounds. Other members of the chicken family are looked upon as being positively useless if they weigh more than 18 ounces.

The chicken farmer can figure to a dicety just how large the fowl to be hatched will be, what the color of the plumage will be and how many feath-

Work With Nature.

On his own farm each farmer is supposed to find the material for study which he is expected to adjust, and to regulate, so far as he can, for his purpose; hence the condition of his own farm so far as it is under his control, is of the greatest importance to him. No one who expects to do good farming can hope to find in the beginning everything furnished by nature and ready to his hand, and in the best possible order. This confidence that nature has done for the farm about all that can be done for it to make it productive, has disappointed many a farmer of good intentions who thought he knew how to farm.—Buffalo Express.

No Farmer, However Rich His Land Can Afford to Do It.

Experience has thoroughly demonstrated the fact that no farm, no matter how rich the soil, will grow good crops right along without liberal supplies of manure. On the majority of farms the greatest part of the stock are given the run of the pastures during what may be termed the growing season so that there is not a very large amount of manure made that needs handling. But as soon as it becomes necessary to commence feeding the stock the opportunity for making and saving manure is improved. In order to make the most out of it some planning of work ahead is necessary. It is as important to plan to save the liquid voidings as well as the solids and plenty of bedding that can be used all through the winter is necessary to this. Then feed lots or places where the stock can be fed together and the droppings be gathered up, is essential, otherwise a considerable portion will be wasted. A good plan now is to save up everything that can be used to an advantage for bedding, and if rightly managed will help materially to increase the quantity of manure. One thing should be remembered, that while it is quite an item to make and save all of the manure possible it is of no advantage to increase the quantity at the expense of quality. Another item is to arrange good feed lots with racks or mangers where the rough feed can be used and at the same time the manure all be saved. The only safe plan is to treat the manure the same as a crop and plan to make the most out of it, making all that can be done and then saving and hauling out and applying to the land whenever the other farm work will permit.—N. J. Shepherd, in Farmer's Voice.

about 2 inches square and 1 1-2 inches deep; in the bottom of this hole lay a piece of an old buggy spring 2 inches long; on it place a blank 7-8-inch nut. This will be a step for the gate to be pivoted on. Set the gate in the step; take a piece of plank about 18 inches long; bore a 3-4-inch hole 6 inches from one end; put the plank on the top, and pivot and spike it securely to top of gate post. The gate swings in either direction, and does not pull on the post so hard as if hung on hinges.

ample, the largest chicken at the show was the buff cochin, a magnificently buff-colored, wonderfully be-feathered fowl.

This giant bird was not blessed with a name, but he had won the first prize because of his beautiful appearance, and particularly owing to the fact that he had more feathers upon his splendid legs than any other buff cochin in the show. The prize winner weighed over 15 pounds, stood nearly two feet high when not crowing, and nearly three feet high when he was.

In contrast to this lord of the coop was a little bantam, a black-breasted, red game bantam that became famous on the first day of the show by slipping between the wires of the cage, which were but an inch and a half apart, and making a bold stride for liberty. The bantam weighed 15 ounces, stood seven inches high and held in the hand would not appear larger than a good ball of worsted. The little one also came in for a prize, but had its weight been 18 ounces it would have been disqualified. It was full grown, too.

At the last dog show equally striking contrasts were seen. Everybody went wild over the Great Dane, Major McKinley. This grand dog resembled a small horse in size. The smallest exhibit at the show was a wee, beautiful black and tan that could easily have been carried in the Major's mouth. The little fellow was nearly two years old, and was worth $1,000. Romeo II. was his name.

There is quite as much difference in the size of men. Giants and dwarfs are not met on Broadway every day, but they are by no means rarities. Hassan Ali, an Egyptian giant, may be contrasted with Gretchen Christian, a Swiss dwarf.

Ali is 18 years old, and is eight feet tall. Experts have said that he will be the tallest man the world has ever seen in modern times. He is good looking, has dark brown eyes, a full chin, a small nose and prominent ears and lips.

Fritz, the dwarf, is five years older than Ali, but she is only 2 1-2 feet high. She came as an immigrant to this country not long ago and went to live at Stony Creek, Ohio.

CHAPTER IV.

Constance changed her dress and made a tour of her rooms. They seemed to contain every luxury which a woman could desire. A Collard & Collard, prettily draped, stood in the angle of the sitting room; a Chippendale writing table supplied with innumerable materials, necessary and unnecessary, was placed in a good light; and a couple of easy chairs, which seemed to woo the spectator to repose, were drawn up one behind a screen and the other to the window, through which the dying sun spread a red glow over the beautiful room.

As she stood and looked round, the tears rose to her eyes for the second time that day. The first time they had been called up by the loving words of little Lord Lancebrook; now they were caused by the remembrance of the rough, rude hut in far-away Australia. If her dear, dead father could only have been with her, to enjoy the rest and ease of all this luxury, was her thought.

But Constance was not of the "crying" order of girls, and she rapidly brushed away her tears and sat down and wrote a line to the kind-hearted woman of fashion, Lady Armstead, who had procured her the situation at the castle.

Having done this, she sat and waited, scarcely knowing whether to go down stairs or to rest patiently until some one came to her.

She had not to wait long. There came a tap at the door, and the maid entered with a dainty tea service in silver and Crown Derby, which she set out on one of the Chippendale tables as a matter of course.

"Her ladyship thought you would like to have your tea up here, miss, and rest," she said.

"Thank you," said Constance; but even as she said it she doubted whether it would not have been better for her to go down-stairs. As she was debating this in her mind and pouring out small hands, and Constance found herself in a long gallery lined with portraits and pictures.

"I used to be afraid to come here when I was little," remarked his Lordship, "they look so live, you know, and some of them are so ugly, aren't they? That one in the armor, the first one in the row, is Guilbert de Brakespeare, the founder of our house," he said with an air of innocent pride. "And that's Norman, his son, and so on. There's grandpapa — and there's grandma, and—" He stopped suddenly, for the Marchioness had passed through the curtains and stood behind them.

"Arol is doing the honors, I see. I hope he is not boring you, Miss Grahame. He ought to have allowed you a little grace after your journey."

"I am not in the least tired," said Constance.

"I was just showing her the portraits, grandma," said his Lordship. "And I think she cares for this sort of thing, you know. Miss Brownjohn didn't. She said she hated portraits, and all that."

"Arol is rather hard on your predecessor," said the Marchioness with a smile as she laid her hand on the boy's curls.

"Yes, he makes me tremble, lest I should not come up to his standard; it is rather a high one, I fear," said Constance.

The old lady glanced at the boy's eyes, fixed with rapt attention and childish admiration upon Constance, and smiled.

"I don't think you have much cause for apprehension," she said in her low, soft voice.

"And that's me," broke in Arol, stopping before a portrait of himself. "When I was quite young. Of course, it isn't like me now."

Constance and the Marchioness exchanged a smile, and they were passing on when Lord Lancebrook said:

"Oh, grandma, you must show Miss Grahame Uncle Wolfe's portrait."

friends; Lord Elliot, our nearest neighbor, and the rector and his wife."

"I should like to come down, Lady Brakespeare," said Constance, simply.

"Very well, my dear. We dine at eight. You will hear the bell. Arol, I suppose, must come in to dessert?"

"Of course, grandma: Lord Elliot's coming," assented his little lordship. "Let's go into the gardens, Miss Grahame."

"Yes; but don't tire Miss Grahame out the first day," said the marchioness as she left the room.

They went along the stately terrace into the gardens, and Lord Lancebrook showed Constance his own particular flower-bed—which was the only one in which nothing seemed to thrive; and he was taking her on to the stables to see his pony, when the nurse appeared and carried him off.

Constance went back to the house with them, and looked over her slender wardrobe for something suitable for the occasion. She had not thought that she would be asked to join in any of the dinner parties at the castle, and had no evening dress. There was nothing but a plain black silk, but she put some lace at the throat and sleeves, and was content. She was not the kind of girl to endure agonies of shame or envy because she lacked a fifty-guinea costume of Worth's.

After a while the dinner bell rang out sonorously, and with its last peal Lord Lancebrook appeared at the door.

"I thought I'd show you the way down; you might feel shy, being the first time," he explained, naively.

He was magnificently dressed in purple satin, with broad old Honiton collar and cuffs, and looked as if he had stepped out of one of the frames in the picture gallery.

"You look so grand that I scarcely dare kiss you in case I should spoil you," said Constance.

"I'll risk that, Miss Grahame," he said, putting up his face. "Of course I've got my best things on because Lord Elliot's coming, you know. He gave me this watch—see," he added, stopping on the stairs and lugging out a tiny one. "It's a very good timekeeper. I wound it up once, I did indeed, and—ah!" he broke off with a cry of delight, "here he is!" and he drew his hand from her's and sprang from the stairs into the arms of a gentleman who had just entered the hall.

The gentleman caught him deftly, and with the ease of an athlete swung him up on his broad shoulder, then looked up at Constance with a laugh, which died away as he saw that she was strange to him.

Constance, even if she had not heard so good an account of him from Arol, her cup of tea, the door opened very gently and Lord Lancebrook's face, with its long auburn curls, was visible.

"May I come in?" he said.

Constance nodded a welcome, and he ran in and clasped his arms across her lap. Not an attitude the child took was ungraceful, and it would have required a heart of stone to withstand him. Constance's heart was of the softest and warmest material.

"I am very glad you have come," she said. "Will you have some of my toast?"

"Well, I've had my tea," he said, "but I'll have a piece more to keep you company. I have my tea in the nursery, though I think I'm rather too big for that now, don't you?"

"I do," repeated Constance. "You shall have it with me for the future, if you like."

"Really?" he exclaimed. "That will be jolly nice."

Constance smiled. "Let me see, I am your governess, am I not?" she said.

"Yes; but I'd almost forgotten it. You are not a bit like a governess."

Constance could have hugged him.

"Well, then, I think I shall lay an embargo on the word 'jolly,'; it is expressive, but not pretty."

"All right," he said, gravely; "I won't say it, though George always says it."

"George is a groom, you are Lord Lancebrook," said Constance, smilingly. "Though I think George must be a very nice man or you would not like him. Some more toast? Some milk?"

"Thank you, but I mustn't eat too much, for I'm going down to dessert today. I don't usually when there is a party; but Lord Elliott is coming tonight, I heard Cousin Rue say, and I always go into dessert when he is here. Ah, you'll like him," he added, confidently. "He is so handsome and so very jol—I mean so very kind. He's my godfather, and a most wonderful man. He can do everything, shoot, ride and swim—ah, he can swim! He is teaching me, and he says that some day I shall dive as well as he does, but," with a doubtful sigh, "I don't think I shall. What a pretty locket that is," he broke off to exclaim.

Constance put her hand to her bosom; a locket of black onyx had slipped from her dress, beneath which it was generally hidden.

She was putting it back, when, moved by the frank curiosity of the large eyes fixed on it, she touched the spring and held the locket out to him.

"Oh!" he said in an awe-struck tone. "I know who it is. It's your father."

"Yes," said Constance, softly; and she closed the locket and hid it away in its accustomed place over her heart.

"I'm sorry I spoke about it," he said, with swift comprehension of her silent pain. "It's made you remember him. Wouldn't you like to come and see the house?" he added, as if struck by some idea of diverting her mind.

"Very much," said Constance.

"Come along, then," he exclaimed.

Hand in hand they went into the corridor and Lord Lancebrook leaned over the balustrade.

"That's the hall; you know that, and you've seen the drawing room. Come into the dining room."

"Let us go and see the nursery and school room first," said Constance.

"All right, this way," he returned, and led her under an archway to a large room in the south of the house.

"This is the nursery, and that is the nurse. Turner, here's Miss Grahame."

An elderly woman with a kind and motherly face came forward and dropped a courtesy, and Constance held out her hand.

"Lord Lancebrook and I have been making friends, nurse," she said.

"Ah, yes, miss," said the nurse, looking at him with a fond smile. "He has been telling me about you. You'll find him very tractable, miss," she added in an undertone.

"I am sure of that," responded Constance.

"Come on; here's the school room," said Lord Lancebrook, leading her into a large room adjoining the nursery. "That's my rocking horse; that is, it was; I've got a real live pony now, and of course I don't ride that; but it's handy when I have children come and see me, you know. And this leads to the picture gallery," he went on, taking her into another corridor, at the end of which hung two thick curtains of purple plush. He pushed these aside with his

A spasm of pain seemed to pass over the old lady's placid face, and she winced palpably.

"Not now; another time, perhaps, Arol," said Constance, in a whisper; but the marchioness stopped.

"I will show it you now, Miss Grahame," she said. "I should show it to you some time. He speaks of my eldest son Wolfe, the present marquis."

She went up to one of the apparently solid panels which occurred now and again in the line, and, touching a spring with her wasted finger, the panel slid back, and revealed the portrait of a young man.

It was a singularly handsome face; not unlike Arol's; but there was an expression of audacity and recklessness, an air of "deviltry" and wildness, which seemed to proclaim itself from every feature—the flashing eye and proudly curved lip, the low and resolute forehead, and even in the shapely hands, which closed as if with ill-brooked impatience over the hunting crop.

Constance looked at it, and as she did so a strange feeling assailed her.

She knew that she had never seen the face before, and yet in some vague way it seemed familiar to her.

The marchioness noticed the effect the portrait had produced upon Constance.

"He is very handsome, is he not?" she said, with a quiver of motherly pride and sadness in her voice.

"Very," assented Constance almost in a whisper.

"He is my eldest, and, God forgive me, was always my best beloved." She put her hand to her eyes. "Perhaps that is why I am punished. But all who knew him loved him; yes, notwithstanding his faults, and—and—they were many."

She paused; Constance remained silently gazing at the reckless face, which exerted a fascination over her she could not shake off.

"You see, I speak of him as if he were dead," continued the marchioness, "and it almost seems to me as if I had lost him, as I have done the rest; it is so many years since I have seen him. He was always so wild and reckless, and his father— But it was my fault; my love made me weak and blind to his faults; and yet, with all his wildness, he was so lovable. My dear," and she turned her brimming eyes to Constance, "there was not a mother in the county that did not envy me my handsome, generous, headstrong boy."

"Where is he now?" asked Constance, gently.

The marchioness shook her head.

"I do not know. His last letter, three months ago, was dated from America. He may not be there now. He could never stay long in one place. I wrote to him telling him of his father's death—I had not known where to write for years before that—and begging him to come home. He is the marquis, the owner of all Brakespeare, you know," she said with touching simplicity.

"And did he not reply?"

The old lady wiped her tears away.

"Yes; he sent me his love and kind messages for all of them, but no word of his return. He may come back at any moment; it would be like him; he may not come back till I am not here to welcome him! Close the panel, my dear; it moves quite easily. I could not bear to have his face uncovered, looking down at me, and reminding me that perhaps I had seen him for the last time."

Constance closed the panel, and the marchioness, after a moment or two, turned to her with a smile through her tears.

"I am afraid you will think I am a very doleful old lady, Miss Grahame," she said, "but it is only when I am talking of my son that I give way, and I do not often speak of him. I hope you are quite comfortable in your rooms. They are near Arol's, as he has no doubt shown you. I was coming to ask you, when I saw you here. We are going to have a few friends to dine tonight; will you join us, or would you rather have dinner served in your own rooms? You shall do just as you please. It is not a dinner party, just a few would have been prepossessed by Lord Elliot's face, and if not by his face, most certainly by his laugh, and she stood and smiled faintly.

"I beg your pardon," he said, stroking his thick yellow moustache. "Arol, these are pretty manners, to desert a lady in this unceremonious way. What do you mean by it? On your knees and beg pardon immediately. (Or shall I do it for you, for I'm afraid all your bad manners were learned from me."

"It's Miss Grahame, the new governess," cried Lord Lancebrook from his perch. "She won't mind; she's not like Miss Brownjohn."

"No, she's not," muttered Lord Elliot under his breath, as he inclined his head, as well as he could under the circumstances, to Constance. "Forgive us, Miss Grahame. Arol spoils me; in fact, we spoil each other."

They went into the drawing room, Arol still on Lord Elliot's shoulders; and Constance, walking beside them, had time to observe the stalwart proportions of the boy's great friend.

Lord Elliot was an excellent type of the present day county gentleman, who is as far removed from his forefathers as the modern thoroughbred is from the old Flemish charger. There was something particularly taking in the frank and manly face with its good-natured smile, so fair and Saxon that against Arol's long brown locks Lord Elliot's hair looked almost yellow.

"Oh, Arol! Arol!" exclaimed the marchioness as the three entered. "My dear Ernest, why do you let him plague you so?"

Lord Elliot laughed as he shook hands.

"Oh, all right," he said. "I'll take my revenge some day. Wait till I'm an old man, and then I'll make him carry me. I expect my hair's in a nice state;" and with his pleasant laugh he went up to greet the rector and wife.

"This is Miss Grahame, Ernest," said Lady Brakespeare, when he came back to her.

"We've been introduced already," he said, turning to Constance. "I think Master Arol is particularly fortunate," he added, his eyes following Constance as she moved away. "What a beautiful girl!" and his voice sank to an almost inaudible whisper.

"Yes, is she not?" assented the marchioness; "and she is so sweet. I know she is good and kind, though she has only been in the house a few hours. I—I—" she smiled a little piteous smile. "You'll think me foolishly susceptible, Ernest, but she has won my heart already."

"By George!" he said with a blush that became him remarkably well, "I'm just about as foolish myself."

"Dinner is served, my lady."

"Where is Ruth, I wonder?" said the marchioness. At this moment Lord Arol ran in with his hand behind his back, and making straight for Lord Elliot, whispered:

"Here you are! I'm sorry I roughed it; be quick, no one will notice if you turn your back;" and with due mystery he presented a tiny hair-brush.

Lord Elliot burst into a laugh.

"What, brush my hair before company—oh, Arol!"

"Well, I'll do it for you!" he said. "Miss Grahame, hold me up, please."

"Arol, Arol!" remonstrated the marchioness, but with the usual loving smile. "Ernest, it is your own fault; why do you let him take such liberties?"

"Oh, it's brotherly kindness; he knows how a man feels when his hair's all awry. Will you lift him up, Miss Grahame? I'm afraid we shall have to let Chase's Ointment Cures All Skin Irritations.

GRACIE AITON.

Of the many skin diseases, eczema is one of the worst and most common. The one effective remedy so far discovered for it is Dr. Chase's Ointment. It has never been known to fail. Mr. Andrew Aiton, of Hartland, N.B., says: "My little daughter, Grace Ella, aged three and a half, was a dreadful sufferer from eczema for three years. We tried a number of alleged cures and several doctors, but all without effect. Her's was indeed a bad case. Her little body was entirely covered with rash. One day our local druggist, Mr. Wm. E. Thistle, recommended me to try Dr. Chase's Ointment. I did so, and four boxes effected a complete cure and saved our child."

Dr Chase's Ointment is just as effective for piles, salt rheum and sores of all descriptions. For sale by all dealers and Edmanson, Bates & Co., manufacturers, Toronto; price 60 cents.

There is nothing to equal Chase's Linseed and Turpentine for severe colds and lung troubles. Large bottle 25 cents.

him work his wicked will; besides, it's only fair to my valet."

Constance, with a blush that became her as well as Lord Elliot's did him, lifted Arol up to the required height, and the boy, with perfect gravity, proceeded to inflict torture and make matters worse. Constance could not repress a smile, and the performance was in full swing when Lady Ruth entered.

She stopped short, and as her sharp eyes took in the picture, at which the rest were laughing with genuine enjoyment, her face flushed angrily.

"Arol!" she said, advancing. "Lord Elliot, do you like being made ridiculous?" and she directed a stare of haughty surprise at Constance, who instantly put Arol down.

Lord Elliot looked rather disconcerted, but only for a moment.

"It's all right, Lady Ruth," he said. "It's all my fault—it always is."

"I don't think you were to blame on this occasion. Arol ought to be is his proper place—the nursery," but she looked at Constance instead of his Lordship.

Fortunately, the long-suffering butler announced the dinner again, and Lord Elliot, as highest in rank, went for the rector's wife, and led the way. Constance and the Marchioness brought up the rear, and Constance found herself next the rector, but opposite Lord Elliot.

The worthy clergyman was of the age at which one's dinner is of the first importance, and it was not until he had discussed the soup and fish and had chosen his entree that he found time to ask Constance if she had seen the new wing of the church which the Marchioness had just built. Constance answered rather at random, for she had been engrossed by the splendor of the room and its appointments; the masses of plate upon the table, the rich glass and exquisite flowers, the noiseless and machinelike movements of the servants, the general air of wealth and luxury, and that peculiar refinement and grace of the whole affair which were so strange to her. Once more her thoughts had wandered back to the rough hut and the plain fare of the Australian wilds, and it almost seemed wicked to be sitting there with such surroundings without having done something to deserve the wonderful change of circumstances.

"Ah, yes, you only arrived to-day," said the rector. "True, I had forgotten. And you came from——?"

Before Constance could reply——

"Ah, travel, travel; the one thing I long to do," said Lord Elliot, bending forward. "I must persuade you into telling me all about it, Miss Grahame."

Constance flushed slightly as she thought of the last scene that had occurred in the hut.

He saw the flush and her momentary embarrassment, and went on quickly:—

"I've always meant going in for travelling, but I'm too lazy, I'm afraid. I quite envy you."

and came forward to meet her, and as he did so Constance stopped and uttered an exclamation.

The portrait in the picture gallery of Lord Wolfegang flashed before her mind, and she knew the man who stood before her was the long-lost Marquis of Brakespeare.

His face for a moment seemed to reflect her startled look as he fixed his eyes on her—the dark eyes of the portrait; then he bowed.

"Do not be frightened," he said. "I told Arol to bring some one to me, some friend of my mother."

His tone was meant to reassure her, but it had the contrary effect, for at the first word he uttered, a thrill of confused emotion ran through her, and she seemed to remember the voice. And yet that must be impossible. She had recognized him by his portrait, but portraits do not speak.

"I have frightened you, I see," he said. "Will you sit down and wait a moment?"

He put a chair for her, and he laid his hand on the boy's shoulder.

"Arol, do you know who I am?" he asked.

The child looked up at him in silence for a moment; then, as if encouraged by something in his face, he held out his hand.

"I think you are Uncle Wolfe," he said.

"You are right, I am," replied the marquis.

ALL ABOUT THE FARM.

Swiss Cattle Are Healthy Because They Are Exercised.

Last year a party of English gentlemen visited Switzerland on a public occasion related to the dairy interests. They were much impressed with the Swiss cow and especially the Simmenthaler breed. This fact was made known at the time by quotations from a correspondent in a letter to The Agricultural Gazette of London. Mr. Havemeyer, who has recently made a purchase of these cattle, is quoted in The Farmers' Home as saying that: "I have had constantly brought to my attention the fact that owing to persistent inbreeding the stamina and health of many Jerseys were on a yearly decline. The Jersey cow is the ideal butter cow, with the exception of the matter of health. She has been pampered and petted until she is so nervous that the slightest thing puts her off her feed, but she will undoubtedly return under favorable conditions the largest amount of profit for the expense incurred." One of the reasons that the Swiss cow is so hardy, so their friends say, is due to their treatment by Swiss dairymen. They are used to work and after calving are put to drawing manure and the general farm work, not being hard pressed. This gives them exercise, appetite and out-door air. The result is a vigorous cow with good health and not liable to disease. Their milk record is high. Large herds have records of six to seven thousand pounds of milk yearly.

One of the most interesting experiments with hogs that we have read is given by the Rural World, as having been made several years ago, in Ohio by Joseph Sullivan. A very large number of hogs were weighed on September 10th and turned into a 40-acre corn field, the corn being in the roasting stage—perhaps in the best condition for fattening hogs—and they remained in that field till October 23d, having eaten down the field. They were again accurately weighed and found to have gained 16,000, or 10 pounds per bushel of corn eaten, estimating the yield at 40 bushels per acre. Then, as an experiment, he selected from the lot 100 hogs, averaging 190 pounds each, placed them in large covered pens with plank floors and troughs and fed them upon corn meal ground in the ear and well steamed. At the end of 10 days they were weighed and found to have gained 20 pounds to each bushel of 70 pounds of meal fed, the weather at this time being mild. They were further fed to test the effect of temperature, and ast he weather became cold the gain was reduced to six and a light feed of grain daily will do much for them, and when changing from fresh grass to dry hay on going into winter quarters, a supply of roots should always be provided. The succulence of the roots makes up in a great measure for the loss of moisture in the green grass and thereby avoids diseases likely to be induced by the sudden change of diet. In fact there is no better food for sheep than turnips. Wherever the conditions are favorable for this crop it will pay to grow it for sheep.

It would probably be better, both for the egg producer and the consumer, if none were ever put up for winter use. There is some deterioration of quality in eggs that are preserved by any formula. This detracts from the price of winter eggs by diminishing the demand for them. With good care and feed of fowls eggs can be produced in winter. If only fresh laid eggs were for sale then, the demand would make a price that would well pay the poulterer for this extra care. As it is the limed eggs hold the market down to prices that only pay for limed eggs. The man who tries winter egg production a few years gives it up. He can make more money by letting his hens take their natural course, and when eggs are the cheapest saving them for use in winter. But this, though temporarily profitable, is an injury to the market, and results in fewer eggs being used at any time of year.

They are raising peanuts in the Salt River Valley, Ariz. A farmer in that fertile section expects to have a crop of 300 sacks this season.

Velvet Gown With Lace Revers.

The Boer Woman.

The Boer woman is unlovable in appearance; graces and modern accomplishments are unknown to her. Handsome she is not, nor is her temper angelic. Her cooking would often kill an ostrich, and her voice is not attuned to harmony. All that, notwithstanding, the most kissed woman on earth is the Boer woman. From the cradle to the grave she is kissed—by great-grandfather and great-grandmother by her grandfather and grandmother, of course, she is kissed by her parents. She is kissed by her granduncles and aunts, by cousins, male and female, to the last degree of kinship. She is kissed by the relatives of the above and by their relatives. Her brothers and brothers-in-law, her sisters and sisters-in-law and all their children kiss her. So does her sweetheart and all her female friends and acquaintances. Her husband and children, and all their relatives and female friends, residing long or short under her roof, kiss her repeatedly every day.

Whether she and her husband are in good circumstances or not, he buys or sells nothing without asking her advice and abiding by it. He undertakes no work without her sanction. She commands her married son of 50 in the same way that she did when he was 5. He obeys and kisses her just as childlike. She calls her husband by his Christian name to her friends. To others she speaks of him as "the baas." Ask her if he is her "baas." "No," he is her "man." "What white woman," she asks you, "ever had a master? Do you take me for a Kaffir woman?"

quite envy you."

Constance remained silent, and he turned to Lady Ruth; but it seemed as if he could not distract his attention from the beautiful face opposite him; and once Constance, looking up, caught his eyes fixed upon her with a marked attention, which, though he diverted it instantly, she fully felt.

It was not a particularly elaborate menu, but the dinner seemed interminable to Constance, though the beauty of the room and the air of luxury surrounding her were exerting their natural glamor over her. The only break in the enchantment was the sharp, incisive voice of Lady Ruth, which seemed to break in with metallic precision every time Lord Elliot bent forward to speak to her, Constance, and he did so frequently.

Constance found herself waiting for the sound of the sharp, clear voice with a kind of impatience; and knew, though she tried hard to fight it down, that a vague antagonism to the owner of the voice was rising within her.

Suddenly, as the sweets were being handed round, and in a moment of comparative silence, a bell rang loudly.

The Marchioness started, and looked round a little nervously.

"What can that be?" she said in a low voice.

"It was the hall bell," replied Lady Rue, promptly, and without putting down her spoon. "Whom do you expect?"

"Expect? No one, my dear," said the Marchioness.

Lady Rue shrugged her shoulders coolly.

"Whoever it is, is late for dinner," she said, indifferently; and she turned to made some remark to Lord Elliot.

A minute or two elapsed, and Constance had forgotten the sudden loud ringing of the bell, when the door opened and Lord Lancebrook came in.

He stood looking round in a half-hesitating manner, and Lady Ruth said, sharply:

"You are before your time, Arol. The dessert is not in yet."

"Never mind," murmured the Marchioness, apologetically. "Let him come in," and with a smile she beckoned to him.

"Yes," said Lord Elliot. "Come and try this jelly, Arol," and he signed to a footman to place a chair next his own.

But Arol shook his head with an unusual gravity, and, going up to Constance, drew her head down to his, and whispered:—

"Come outside into the hall, Miss Grahame. I want you."

"What is the matter, Arol?" demanded Lady Ruth. "You should not whisper. It is rude and vulgar. Go round to Lord Elliot when he calls you."

The boy looked at her, but did not obey.

"Come outside," he repeated. "Something has happened—some one wants you."

Constance, the mark for all eyes, colored, then turned pale.

"What has happened? Some one wants me, Lord Lancebrook? You must be mistaken."

"No, I'm not," he said. "You'd better come or it will be too late."

Constance rose; she did not know what else to do.

"Lord Lancebrook wishes me to go into the hall with him, Lady Brakespeare," she said.

"Oh, it's some trick or nonsense," exclaimed Lady Ruth. "Tell him to go and take his seat, Miss Grahame, please."

"Let him go, dear," pleaded the Marchioness. "Arol, do not be naughty—"

"I won't grandma," he responded, his eyes threatening tears; "but she must come!"

Constance thought it best to go and prevent any further fuss, and she allowed him to lead her into the hall.

"Well, what is it, Arol?" she said. "I'm afraid you are getting us both into sad disgrace."

"I can't help it," he retorted, rather piteously. "It isn't my fault. He told me to fetch some one, and I preferred you to Aunt Rue."

"He—who?" she asked.

"I don't know. Come in here."

He opened the door of the library as he spoke, and Constance saw the tall figure of a man standing in the centre of the room.

He wore a long fur travelling-coat, and his hat stood on the table beside him.

He turned as she entered, the gain was reduced to six and a quarter pounds per bushel, and when the thermometer reached from 5° to 10 degrees below zero they made no gain on all the meal they would eat. The effect of temperature will naturally strike the mind of the reader at once. He will also notice the double gain arising from non-exercise in the pen together with the ground and steamed corn. Two strong points appear—shelter saves food and grinding and cooking corn, combined with ease, comfort and idleness, also saves food.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Disease and disaster are reasonably sure to follow when foods, particularly soft stuffs, are thrown down among the dirt and filth of the floor. It soon sours, and it absorbs a portion of the surrounding filth; on general principles it is a bad practice.

The most promising indication of the future of the sheep industry of this country is to be found in the kind of men who, becoming discouraged at the present depression of prices, have gone out of the business. These are the very class of people who have weighed it down by their ignorance and have swamped the markets by dumping on them a lot of woolly meat unworthy of the name of mutton.

There is now much less grass-fed beef than formerly. Grass will fatten, but it costs less in most places to feed some corn or other grain with it. This also makes better beef, as the animal fattened rapidly is more juicy and tender than one that has taken a long time to put on its flesh and fat. The exception to this is when grain is fed with dry and constipating food to fattening animals in winter. Meat thus made is not so good as that made on grass in summer. The truth is that grain and succulent food should be fed together, as this is necessary to maintain good digestion.

Because sheep act as the scavengers on the farm, that is no reason why their diet should consist wholly of weeds and briars. These may be very good to fill in with, but are hardly sufficiently nutritious. Good pasturage is essential. When fattening a

Nervous Prostration

It is now a well established fact in medical science that nervousness is due to impure blood. Therefore the true way to cure nervousness is by purifying and enriching the blood. The great blood purifier is Hood's Sarsaparilla. Read this letter:

"For the last two years I have been a great sufferer with nervous prostration and palpitation of the heart. I was weak in my limbs and had smothered sensations. At last my physician advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla which I did, and I am happy to say that I am now strong and well. I am still using Hood's Sarsaparilla and would not be without it. I recommend it to all who are suffering with nervous prostration and palpitation of the heart." MRS. DALTON, 56 Alice St., Toronto, Ontario. Get Hood's, because

SPRING ASSIZES.

The Spring Assizes opened at the Court House here before His Honor Mr. Justice Ferguson, on Monday, at 2 p.m. His Honor in his charge to the Grand Jury complimented the county on the almost complete absence of crime, there being but one case of a criminal nature before the court. He pointed out, however, that this evidence of lack of crime didn't go to prove the non-existence of it, as many criminal cases that heretofore came before this court, were now disposed of in the minor courts. He referred to the reduction of the Grand Jury from 24 to 18 as a good reform, although the lessening of the number of the Grand Jury entailed greater responsibility on the members of that body. He sketched briefly the duties that were expected of them, and charged them on the case to come before them.

The jury retired and after being out several hours returned a true bill against Thos. Murphy on the charge of being discovered in the Hope Hotel, Newburgh, with intend to commit theft.

The following composed the Grand and Petit Juries:

GRAND JURY.

Benjamin Davis, Levi Evans, George Friskin, W G Hawley, A W Hitchins, Chas H Howard, Edward Huffman, W D Mace, Allison Martin, Shirley Paul, Thos A Percy, R J Wales, Ira B Hudgins, foreman.

GRAND JURY PRESENTMENT.

TO HIS LORDSHIP MR. JUSTICE FERGUSON:

We, the Grand Jury, having disposed of the indictment referred to us for our consideration, visited the gaol and found therein five vagrants, one convict undergoing sentence for being drunk and disorderly, one criminal awaiting trial, one lunatic and one mute. We deeply regret that no more suitable provision is made for that class of our population who have the misfortune to be poor or are deprived of their reasoning faculties. We also visited the Collegiate Institute, and we feel that the county has reason to be proud of such a thoroughly equipped educational institution and one which appears to be doing excellent work.

We congratulate the county upon the compartive absence of crime and trust that this satisfactory state of affairs will long continue. IRA B. HUDGINS, Foreman.

LUND VS FREEHOLD—This was an action brought by Agnes Lund, daughter of Thos. B Lund, for illegal distress of her goods and chattels, situated on what is known as the Whittington farm, down the river. This was an intricate case, fairly bristling with points of law, and occupied the attention of the court for about 10 hours. It was tried by the Judge, by consent of counsel. The action was dismissed with costs, the defendants undertaking not to exact their costs from the plaintiff providing the litigation ceases here. C. J. Holman and Mr Perry, of English & Perry, for the plaintiff; Mr. Nesbitt and Mr. Ferguson, of Morden, Ruttan & Ferguson, for defendant.

UNGER VS SEXSMITH—Nathan Unger sued A. J. Sexsmith and Geo. Hudgins for the burning of his building last fall, claiming that a spark flew from the steam thresher of George Hudgins, which was working on the farm of Mr. Sexsmith, and set fire to his barn and drive house, which adjoined Mr. Sexsmith's barn. The Judge gave decision on two points raised by the defence. He said there was no negligence shown on the part of either Sexsmith or Hudgins, and that the engine was a good one and safe in the ordinary sense of the term. He reserved decision as to whether in bringing purposes, or as his paramour. She was the cook, and an old lady of 70 years was the housekeeper. His daughter and son formed the other members of the household. He never had criminal intercourse with Lily Lucas. Her sister had been at his house on and of. He was never intimate with her either. Lily Lucas had sat on his knee on one occasion. He did not know that his house was considered little better than a house of assignation, nor was it so. He had put the $5 referred to in his purse after closing the bar on Saturday evening, and had not removed the pocket book from his pocket until after he discovered Murphy in the room. He had no occasion to use the money in the pocket book, as he had $8 or $9 in silver in another pocket. He had not been to see any woman in Napanee, nor had he been with a woman that Sunday. He was perfectly sober when he got home that Sunday night.

The other witnesses for the Crown were Mr. Connell, who corrobated Jennings story, in so far as it affected him, and Mr. Jennings' son, who had charge of the house in his father's absence. He swore that A. Conway had left the house for church about 7 o'clock p.m., and didn't return any more that night, and that Murphy had been in the hotel about 6.30 p.m., but he did not see him after this. He locked the house about 11 o'clock, and so far as he knew all the inmates had retired.

Mr. Shane had nothing to do with the case further than driving the prisoner to Napanee. When the prisoner was getting out of the rig in front of the lockup at Napanee a bill fell from the sleeve of his coat. He could not say what denomination it was, but was positive it was money. This closed the case for the crown.

The defence called a number of witnesses to prove that the hotel didn't bear a very good reputation. The witnesses for the most part couldn't speak from personal knowledge, although the smile of one young man who had spent an evening in the parlor with Mrs. Lucas and her sister was very expressive. The general talk of the village was that the house was not decent. The young man, with the expressive smile, thought Lily Lucas was somewhat wild, inclined to be gay, as it were.

Miss Murphy, a handsome, well dressed young lady, gave evidence of how she had been roughly ejected from the room by Jennings when she went to see her brother. She had heard that the house wasn't a nice house, and that Mrs. Lucas wasn't a nice woman.

The prisoner was next called, and in a ready manner he recited his meanderings that, to him, eventful night, in great detail. His evidence had a good deal to do in determining the verdict. He had an appointment to meet Mrs. Lucas at the hotel that evening, but a Conway had got in a head of him. He waited upstairs watching them. He believed from what he saw and heard that improper intimacy took place that evening between the two. He went into Jennings room several times that evening to avoid detection, and each time had got under the bed. He did not know at the time it was Jennings' room. He waited around until Conway would leave, intending to keep his appointment with Mrs. Lucas. About 11 o'clock he went into the parlor where he fell asleep and when he awoke it was midnight. In brief he said he heard Jennings coming upstairs, and he went into the bedroom and got under the bed to avoid detection. Jennings came in to the room, but did not lock the door until after he had disrobed. He had hoped Jennings would neglect to lock the door, and that he could crawl out without detection. He saw the futility of this, with the door locked, and started rattling a paper on the floor to attract Jennings attention. He was puzzled and didn't know exactly what to do. He related his discovery by Jennings, but said Jennings never said anything about the loss of the money until Conway arrived, and the two held a conference outside. The bill spoken of by Mr. Shane he explained was a $1 bill he had in his pocket in case he might need it to give to Mrs. Lucas. It had been exhibited at the Police Magistrate's office in Napanee, and he subsequently gave it to his sister.

The prosecuting and defending counsels then addressed the jury, after which the Judge delivered his charge, which was in favor of the prisoner. He pointed out that if it had been clearly shown that Murphy was there with intent to steal, even if it

The Shakespeare Club will meet on Saturday evening at the residence of Mr. French, upon which occasion the reading of Macbeth will be concluded and a new play selected for the spring reading. This play will probably be Romeo and Juliet, and members are requested to be on hand in full force and bring with them their copies of Romeo and Juliet.

Librarian Preston at the Parliament Buildings was notified Saturday that the suit brought against him by Chas. Frontenac Smith in connection with the Kingston election case had been abandoned. A dismissal of the case by consent was asked for yesterday, but Mr. Preston's solicitor refused, stating that they were ready to proceed on Monday. Judge Osler, however, observed that there was no evidence and he could not see the necessity for proceeding further.

Not so many years ago the annual spring fair day here was an event looked forward to with interest, and was patronized by the countryside. Farmers in great numbers congregated in town to indulge in trading, and to swap stories and good fellowship. The fair of late years has fallen in desuetude and the annual spring fair day on Tuesday was such a tame affair that a stranger would be unaware that such a thing was in progress. This affair seems to have outlived its usefulness.

Mrs. Conway, a highly esteemed lady, passed peacefully away at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr Wellington Warner, on Friday of last week. Deceased was 65 years of age, and had been ailing for about four years with consumption. During her illness she exhibited great fortitude and patience and when death's messenger arrived was fully prepared to meet the summons. Deceased was a member of the Methodist church and died in the full hope of a glorious resurrection. She leaves a grown up family, one of her daughters, Mrs. Archie Clarke, residing in Napanee. Her husband preceded her to the grave about a year ago. The funeral took place to the Newburgh cemetery on Saturday, the Rev. D. O. Crossley officiating.

It is with regret we are called upon to record the death of Edna Earle, youngest daughter of Mr. L. D. Williams, of Camden East, who passed away on Saturday last, at the early age of 15 years, 4 months and 4 days. Deceased was a remarkable bright girl and greatly beloved by all who knew her. She had been a student at the Newburgh High school, and the teachers and pupils of the school attended her funeral, which took place from her father's residence to the Camden East cemetery vault on Monday, in a body. Deceased was a sister of Mrs. A. E. Paul, of Napanee, and to her and the bereaved parents and relatives we extend our sincere sympathy in their hour of trial. The funeral on Monday was largely attended, the Rev. McCulloch, assisted by Revs Crossley and McConnell, conducting the services.

Bread Took Tumble.

While Mr. J. N. Lucas was delivering bread in South Napanee, on Wednesday afternoon, he left his horse and bread sleigh standing in front of Mr. S. Lindsay's residence, while in delivering the bread. The horse left to its own meditations was seized with a large sized notion of exercising himself, and started down the road at a gait that would put the ordinary trotter to blush. The speed coupled with the erratic movements of the horse proved too much for the cart, and it protested against such conduct on the part of the equine by turning upside down, scattering the fresh rolls of the staff of life on the snow. The horse ran down several blocks, and was finally brought to a standpoint at the Red Mill, not much the worse for its outing. The rig was not damaged very much.

Mr. Nesbitt moved to have the action for malicious prosecution brought by J. Parks, of Bath, against G. F. Ruttan dismissed. While acting Crown Attorney Mr. Ruttan caused to be issued against Parks a warrant for incest. The action is brought by Parks to discover who furnished the information to Mr. Ruttan which led to his arrest. Mr. Holman and English & Perry, solicitors for Parks objected to the dismissal of the action against Mr. Ruttan, and the judge ruled in their favor. The costs to be costs in the case to the plaintiff.

The Crown vs. Thos. Murphy was taken up on Tuesday afternoon, and it was well after 6 o'clock before it was given to the jury. Mr. Widdifield, of Picton, acted as crown prosecutor, and H. M. Deroche, Q.C., appeared for the defendant. The prisoner was charged with being in the house of Thos. Jennings with intent to commit theft. The first and principal witness for the prosecution was John Jennings, proprietor of the Hope hotel, Newburgh. He swore that on Sunday night, Dec. 20th, he and a boarder named Connell returned from a trip to Napanee. It was about 12 o'clock when they got to Newburgh, and they found the hotel locked, and all the lights out, with the exception of a side door. After going over the house he retired to his room, where, after locking the door, he disrobed, turned down the light and went to bed. He was awakened from a doze by hearing a noise in the room. He waited sometime and the noise was repeated. It sounded like the folding of paper. He located the noise as coming from under the bed, and arose and discovered Murphy under it. The excuse the prisoner gave for being there was that he was watching A. Conway and the hired girl, and had concealed himself there on his approach. About five minutes after he discovered the prisoner under the bed he looked at his pocket book and found $5 missing. His pocket book was in the hip pocket of his trousers. There was about $17 in one and two dollar bills, but he could not say positively as to the number. He had two five dollar bills in the wallet. One was laying lengthways and the other had been folded up three times and then placed in the pocket book. This bill was missing. Another evidence he had of the pocket book being disturbed was that the bunch of keys was found in the bottom of the pocket, whereas when he retired to bed they were on top, and could not possibly have worked down beneath the pocket book. He awakened his son, Connell, and the servant girl, Lily Lucas. He then dispatched his son after A. Conway. The prisoner denied that he had stolen any money, and desired him to search his person, declaring he had not a cent about him. This he would not do as he thought he had not the right. When Conway and the servant girl were brought face to face with Murphy he modified his statements about them. He kept Murphy under surveillance until morning and then he had Mr. Shane drive him to Napanee. He did this without a warrant. He handed Murphy over to Chief Storms when he arrived in Napanee. In the morning before he brought Murphy to Napanee his sister called upon him, but he took her by the arm and told her to leave the room.

The jury retired and after being out about 30 minutes returned with a verdict of not guilty. Murphy was then discharged. Great interest was evinced in the case, the court house being packed throughout the trial.

PARKS vs SHEFFIED—This was an action brought by Mr. Parks of the village of Tamworth, against the township of Sheffield, for damages sustained by falling off a culvert. The jury were unable to agree on a decision. H. M. Deroche, Q.C., and Frank Carscallen for plaintiff, W. S. Herrington for defendants.

GRIMSHAW & PERRY vs GALLAGHER ET AL—This is an action to recover damages for injury to business, and was in progress when we went to press. Mr. Holman and Mr. English for plaintiffs, Mr. Whiting and W. G. Wilson for defendants.

Death of a Pioneer.

Another of the pioneers of this county passed away to his reward at his residence, Graham st., Napanee, on Sunday last, in the person of Mr. Steward Milling. Deceason was a man who during his long and useful life set an example it would be well for many of us to emulate. His life story is but that of many of the brave and hardy pioneers who left their home across the sea and surmounting the difficulties, hardships and vicissitudes of bush life hewed out a home for themselves in the land of their adoption. When but 17 years of age Mr. Milling migrated to Canada from his home near Belfast, Ireland, and landed in the township of Camden a poor lad and in a strange land in the year 1844. For a few years he worked at his trade, shoemaking, and then took up land. He subsequently settled on land in the township of Sheffield, and finally located in the township of Richmond, clearing the homestead on which his son, Mr. Henry Milling now resides. Deceased by the death of his first wife, over 30 years ago, was left alone with five young children to face the trials of a new settlement. The loss of his wife proved a great shock to him, and the responsibility of caring for the little children so early in life deprived of a mother's watchfulness and solicitude was a heavy one. Mr. Milling was a very devoted father, and through life was actuated by a desire to leave his family well provided for. This he accomplished for he leaves his family and his present wife in comfortable circumstances. He experienced all the ups and downs that fall to the lot of the pioneer, but by industry and patience he surmounted all difficulties and was looked upon as one of the most successful farmers of this district. He was justly esteemed for his probity of character, kind heartedness and geniality. Mr. Milling was a remarkably healthy man up to about thirteen years ago, when he contracted inflammation from the effects of which he never fully recovered. Owing to failing health he left the farm about twelve years ago and removed to Napanee. For the past few years his health has been gradually failing, and in his weakened condition he fell a ready victim to an attack of pneumonia which he contracted a few days before his death. His end was a peaceful one. He passed away surrounded by his wife and all the members of his family, and in the full hope of a glorious resurrection. Deceased was 70 years, 4 months and 26 days of age, and leaves a wife and six children to mourn the loss of a good husband and a loving father. By his first wife he had five sons, Hugh and Robert, of the Campbell House; Edward and Henry, of Richmond township; and John of Fredericksburgh. His second wife bore him one daughter, Maggie, who resides with her mother. The funeral took place on Tuesday from the Eastern Methodist church, of which body deceased was a member, to the Eastern cemetery vault, the Rev. Dr. McDiarmid officiating. The following gentleman acted as pall bearers: Messrs. Wright, Nelson McKim, John Dunbar, W. S. Detlor, Wilder Joy and John Wallace.

Mrs. Milling and the family desire us to convey their deep thanks to the many friends and neighbors who so kindly offered their assistance during the illness of Mr. Milling, and for the sympathy extended them in their hour of affliction.

Ontario for Ontarians.

We have just received an attractive little pamphlet from Hon. John Dryden, the Ontario Minister of Agriculture, entitled "The Pioneer Farm and the Wabigoon County, Rainy River District." The attention of the Department having recently been called to this hitherto unsettled region, Mr. Dryden determined to establish there what he termed a "pioneer farm," to demonstrate in a practical manner the country's agricultural capabilities. The experiment so far has been very successful, and this pamphlet giving general information regarding the section, which is now open for settlement, is the result. It is illustrated and contains a map of the district. This information will be very opportune in view of the increasing demand at the present time for cheap land, especially on the part of young men of small capital, the sons of farmers, who desire to secure farms and homes of their own. Such should by all means investigate the Wabigoon country and other unsettled portions of Ontario before turning their attention elsewhere. Ontario still has vast resources at her command,—a heritage intended for her own people,—and presents advantages unsurpassed by any province or by any foreign state. Those desirous of securing a copy of the pamphlet should address a card to the Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

or Irish Catholics object to public schools in Manitoba? It is because of this—An Irishman may not like England very much—but he doesn't want his child to grow up a Frenchman.

Mr. McCarthy read extracts from Mr Wade's pamphlet on the Manitoba School question and quoted the utterance of Mr. O'Donohue, an Irish Catholic of Winnipeg, to prove the utter inefficiency of the Manitoba Separate Schools. Children educated in those schools were doomed to grow up in ignorance of British institutions, and Mr. Donohue says that although the taxes granted to the Separate Schools were ample to meet all requirements, seldom could he find in them a teacher that could speak English. He further found that only twenty five per cent of the French youth could write their own names, while seventy five per cent of the public school youths can both read and write.

There were 97 Separate Schools in Manitoba when abolished, all but forty of these have accepted the public school money and adopted the system.

The Archbishop of St. Boniface had stated the issue plainly at Ottawa last Sunday. This Separate School question, said the Archbishop, was not only a religious and a political question, but a national one as well—the future of the French race is involved in the question. Mr. McCarthy said that if Separate Schools were established in Manitoba the 10,000 French of the Province would soon increase to 40,000 Look at Quebec. By Wolfe's victory on the Plains of Abraham, Quebec was made a British Province. But go to Quebec today and English is practically a dead language, and the Province is more French than France itself.

With public schools in Manitoba we can make the half breeds there British, but leave them to the Hierarchy to educate and and they will swell and establish a French nationality in the province of Manitoba.

Are we doing a duty to our posterity if we bequeath to them this old trouble to settle. No! we should settle now once and for all, for this is a question that every party matter sinks into absolute insignificance before.

He understood that in Lennox there was not a man with the hardihood to defend Remedial Legislation. The member for Lennox, Mr. Wilson, voted against the bill, but I wish to Heaven he had done more. When the Remedial Bill was introduced there were 88 Conservative members opposed to it. But when the vote came to be taken on the Bill, the opposition among the Conservatives had lessened. A judgship in Huron, a superintendentship of a prison in Kingston, a collectorship of customs in another place and various other considerations and the 38 Conservative opponents of the Remedial Bill had dwindled down to 18 and among them the member for Lennox. When the vote was taken on the six months hoist the government only had a majority of 4 among its own followers the rest of the majority being made up by defections from the Liberal ranks. Well what happened. The Bill was read a second time. We fought it. If we hadn't fought it, it would be law, now for the Government would have passed it to satisfy their Quebec masters. But by the opposition which they were able to give to the bill the Government only succeeded in passing twelve clauses of it. He was sorry to tell them that Mr. Wilson was not among those who fought against the Bill. Well, the fight went on, and of Tupper's 18 supporters of the Bill but six were left, and some of these six sat up at night to make a quorum to bulldoze it through parliament. He regretted that he had still another circumstance to relate against Mr. Wilson. When Tupper, not satisfied with the arbritary manner in which he was keeping the House in session all night, demanded that the House should sit on Saturday for the purpose of expediting the passage of the Bill, and Mr. Wilson, as Foster would say, "in a moment of weakness," forgetting that he had voted against the Bill, voted for giving Saturday to the government in order that Sir Charles Tupper might have an extra day to force the Remedial Bill through parliament.

He denounced it. It commands the Catholics on pain of terror and eternal damnation to vote for candidates pledged to support the Remedial Bill. In view of this he urged upon the people of Ontario the necessity of sending men to parliament not only pledged to defeat the Remedial Bill, but the Government which introduces such legislation. Don't allow the Hierarchy of Quebec to impose on your brethren in Manitoba, all for the purpose of keeping a party friend in power. Last night he had been among the "Kittley Blues"—men more orange than King William himself. Some of them, however, thought it a duty to stand by their party. Party feeling seems to have gone mad. If Sir Charles Tupper introduced a motion to annex Canada to the United States some of these same Orangemen would support, because Laurier would do as bad if elected.

After the next election the Governor General would probably send for Laurier to form a government. He may probably threaten us with a Bill. Laurier has told us that he will investigate, and try a policy of conciliation. But let us deal with one thing at a time. If the next government endeavors to pass a Remedial Bill let us down them, too. That is the reason why you should have a Third Party composed of Independent men pledged to oppose interference with Manitoba in the next parliament, so they can down any government that attempts to enforce it.

Send men to parliament with a clean record on this question. Men who will denounce and oppose this or any other government who make it part of their policy to establish Separate Schools in Manitoba. The number of candidates in Ontario supporting the government, but opposed to the Remedial Bill, numbered about 30 or 40. The Great Stretcher has said that the Remedial Bill is the most important question now before the people. If this Bill is passed it will put back the hand on the dial for years in this country. You can't interfere with Manitoba without causing a rebellion that will injure the rest of the Dominion. If the men like Wilson who voted against the bill at the last session were sincere in their opposition to it not only the bill but the Government who championed it would have gone, because the 7 liberals who helped to make the 18 majority for it would have voted a straight want of confidence in the government.

Surely it would not be such a desperate thing if Laurier would come into power, whether he did right or wrong, he couldn't possibly do worse than the present government. They had five years of Liberal government under McKenzie, and although Tupper has said that during McKenzie's time ruin and disaster was abroad in the land, McKenzie's governmentwas a fairly good one. They came into power during a period of depression. We will have these periods of depression, of good and bad times, no matter what government or policy is in force Hard times can't be retarded. When the G. T. R. was building times were good; when the money was all spent and the road completed a period of depression ensued. So too, when the C. P. R. was being constructed and money was being spent with a lavish hand, times were prosperous but when it was finished the enevitable hard times came on again. It isn't free trade or the N. P. that makes good or hard times. Go to England, that God forsaken free trade country, and we find by the words of the chancellor of the exchequer that everything is prosperous, that this year they had the largest surplus that England ever had, that trade is flourishing, exports increasing, and imports coming in, for you can't export unless you import.

Here in Canada we had a falling revenue, poverty stalking abroad in the land, and despite our fiscal policy—the great N.P.—we had a deficit of six millions—because we couldn't afford to buy. Go to England, free trade England, where the tariff is not changed, and they have an abounding revenue and money going begging at 2 per cent.

It simply amounts to this—if you are a manufacturer you will favor a protective tariff, and if a farmer you will favor revenue tariff. A change of governm

BINSON CO.

McCARTHY AT NAPANEE.

Dalton McCarthy is a name to conjure with judging from the reception accorded him in Napanee on Wednesday evening, when he addressed an audience of fully 900 people in the opera house on the great and momentous political questions of the day. Long before the doors were thrown open the street in front of the opera hall was lined with an impatient crowd anxious to secure seats, and when the doors were finally opened at about 7:20 o'clock, the mad rush for seats beggars description. Excursion trains on the B. of Q. brought in a large number of people from the adjacent district and villages to augment the throng, which the opera house was totally inadequate to accommodate, and many hundred were denied admittance.

A large number of ladies occupied position of honor on the stage and by their presence added much to the success of the evening. On the platform were many prominent citizens and farmers of both shades of politics. Seldom or ever have we witnessed a more harmonious or enthusiastic meeting. The appearance of Dalton McCarthy on the stage at about 8 p.m. was the signal for an ovation and the large crowd rose to their feet and cheered themselves hoarse. Mr. McCarthy was accompanied by Messrs. M. W. Pruyn, W. S. Detlor, M. C. Bogart, Thos. E. Anderson, John T. Grange, Thos. Symington and others.

When the cheering had subsided Mr. W. S. Herrington's pretty little daughter, Ellen, stepped forward and presented the leader of the Third Party with a boquet of flowers. Mr. McCarthy stopped and kissed the little maid, and the crowd went wild with enthusiasm again.

Mr. M. W. Pruyn on coming to the front was greeted with hearty cheers. He said he was pleased to see so many present, for more reasons than one, as he had had some hand in getting up this meeting. After a few remarks Mr. Pruyn nominated Mr. Allan Oliver, reeve of Richmond, for chairman. Mr. Thos. Symington, in seconding the nomination, said it might look strange when he rose to second the nomination of his old political enemy, Mr. Allen Oliver. The time had come for a change—we had reached a period in our affairs when all good men should sink party differences and unite for the common good.

Mr. Oliver's nomination was received with favor by the audience, and as chairman, he acquitted himself to the satisfaction of all. After a short speech he called on Mr. Chas. Stevens, Independent Candidate, to come forward (cheers) and on Mr. Wilson (received with an omenous silence) and on Mr. Switzer (cheers.) Messrs. Stevens and Switzer responded to the invitation, but Mr. Wilson was conspicuous by his absence.

Mr. Chas Stevens gave a brief address. He was out as an Independent and in the field to stay until the 23rd of June. He had hoped to be in a position to bring down his platform, but the printer was now busy putting it in type and he might introduce it at a latter stage in the evening.

Mr Switzer also made a short address, in which he stated that he was not only opposed to the Dominion government but on the question of Remedial Legislation as well. He was opposed to interference with the rights of Manitoba to govern herself, ans believed if the Remedial Bill was passed it would disturb provincial autonomy.

Mr. Dalton McCarthy on being introduced was greeted with loud and long continued cheers. He said he was pleased to be present, and was here on his own accord. He had received more pressing invitations to visit Napanee than from any place in Canada and he had at last responded to them. The large gathering here to-night showed the independent sentiment that was abroad in the land and that gathered strength as it went along. It showed that the people had come to have a mistrust and were dissatisfied with both the old political parties. Although he had not had a very great parliamentary party at his back he was not prepared to admit, though weak in numbers, they had not been able to accomplish something. The opposition he had given to the passage of the Remedial Bill and the effort to re-establish Separate Schools in Manitoba had not been in vain, owing to the part which he had the honor to play in parliament, and he did not refer so particularly to the part played in the last session but also to the opposition given in the early part of its history.

It was in 1893 that the late government of Sir John Thompson called upon the government of Manitoba to defend their course for abolishing separate schools, saying that the parliament at Ottawa had the right to interfere. If Sir John Thompson had investigated the facts—the proper course to pursue—he would have found that Manitoba had done no wrong to the minority and were quite able to manage their own affairs, and we would have been saved the racial feeling and strife now existing and which was likely to grow before June 23rd. We have been subject to the domination of the Hierarchy, said Mr. McCarthy. They have imposed on us before and will again unless we settle once for all that the Hierarchy are no longer our masters. (Cheers.)

Mr. McCarthy referred to the history of confederation briefly. We had 65 members from Quebec and 65 from Upper Canada by the arrangement. By the 65 from Upper Canada dividing among themselves they handed over the affairs to the people of Quebec to manage, and I needn't tell you who are the managers in Quebec after the proclamation of Sunday last.

The issue at present is whether we are to manage our own affairs or have them managed for us by the Hierarchy of the Province of Quebec. The question is are we to coerce the legislation of Manitoba? Whether the Hierarchy of Quebec are to tell the Province of Manitoba you must establish Separate Schools.

Mr. McCarthy here went into the history of the Manitoba schools and reviewed them from the time the Province was created in 1871, and endowed with constitutional powers and the right to govern and determine her own educational affairs. At the time Separate Schools were established in Manitoba the province had a population of 12,000, composed of 10,000 half breeds and the remaining 2,000 hardy pioneers who had ventured into the Province in advance of civilization in the hope of earning a livelihood.

Mr. McCarthy dwelt briefly with the schools of the dissident minority in Quebec. He said that in reality what was called Separate or protestant Schools there were really public schools. No self governing province or county ever adopted Separate Schools, and where ever self government prevails, the schools are public and non-sectarian. The same Hierarchy that I have already alluded to refused to join confederation unless they got Separate Schools in Ontario, and so they were imposed on us against our will. But Manitoba was created in '71, 5 years after confederation, and we gave Manitoba power over educational affairs, as it was thought they were better able to manage them and judge the local requirements than we in Ottawa.

The people of Manitoba, composed largely of the people of Ontario, our own brothers and blood relations many of them, determined to get rid of the Separate Schools, and the agitation kept growing until in 1890 it culminated in their abolishment. They were perfectly justified in this action. In these schools the public money which ought to have gone to educate the children was diverted to the church, and as a result the children were growing up in ignorance. In this wide and sparsely settled Province it was found utterly impossible to keep up two systems of schools. The people wanted one system that would be open and common to all, and in taking this course the government of Manitoba was careful not to do injustice to the minority. Their is no grievance in Manitoba. The schools are non-sectarian. The religious exercises are common to both Protestant and Catholic, and the schools are closed with a prayer that no Protestant, no Catholic or no Turk would object to their child listening to.

The reason the whole of this Dominion is rent in twain is to gratify the demands of the Hierarchy of Quebec. They want to perpetuate the French nationality. Its a question of French schools. The Irish or Scotch catholics do not want Separate Schools nor do the half breeds of Manitoba if left alone. If these half breeds are educated in the public schools they will develop into loyal British subjects.—We can make patriots of them. It is because of this the Hierarchy object to public schools. They want to perpetuate the French nationality. Why don't the Scotch per might have an extra day to force the Remedial Bill through parliament.

Well they sat on Saturday but when Sunday morning arrived and the Government for very shame sake had to adjourn the House, they had discussed the Bill so thoroughly that they didn't get any further than the first line of the fourth clause—but no thanks to Mr. Wilson.

He didn't want them to send men like that to parliament. He wanted them to send men who were sincere in their opposition to the Bill. Whoever is your representative let him come with a clear mandement from you to oppose Remedial Legislation and the government who introduces it. Mr. Switzer was opposed to the Remedial Bill; he didn't know where Mr. Stevens stood as he hadn't formulated his platform yet. He may be in favor of the Bill (laughter) and a supporter of Tupper, the High and Mighty. The man whose history is the history of Canada, (loud laughter.) Tupper says: "It is true I am an egotist, but how can I be anything else in speaking of Canada. I built the C. P. R.; I am the author and framer of the National Policy, and I am the Father of Confederation," (laughter.) You good people, said McCarthy, have been raising monuments to Sir John Macdonald and giving him credit for some little part in these undertakings only to find that the man who did it all is Sir Charles Tupper and is still with you. Tupper says I am not worth a hiss. I may not be worth a hiss but I do want to disclaim the patronage of Sir Charles Tupper. Like everything else he claims the credit of being my political god father. He says he is ashamed of being my god-father. He can't be half as ashamed of it as I am dishonored by it. But Tupper may be mistaken. He has a wonderful imagination and a short memory, and you know he has often been dubbed the "Great Stretcher." He believed that Tupper was suffering with what medical men termed senile dementia. It was a form of lunacy that affected the mind if not the body. There was no doubt about the physical vigor of the War Horse of Cumberland. The way he trampled on the rights of parliament demonstrated that. Although we are a staid lot in parliament we enjoyed these little scenes when the War Horse pranced around in his glory. First it was McNeil, of North Bruce, that was read out of the party, and then the faithful Dr. Sproule was kicked out. But what about Clarke Wallace? He was the Grand Soverign of the Orange Order and Tupper couldn't offend him. He is in the party yet. And what about Dr. Weldon who stood on the floor of the House shaking his fist and threatening revelations and daring Tupper to read him out of the party? Tupper said he didn't mean Weldon at all, he was speaking to the miserable conspirator from North Simcoe. Tupper is not proud of me but I'm as little proud of being his godchild as he is of being my political godfather. There are private reasons, which I would not wish to enumerate here, why I do not wish to be connected with the family or be looked upon as the child of that distinguished (?) man. Tupper says that the Queen through her councillors has commanded the parliament of Canada to establish Separate Schools in Manitoba. In obedience to this command he was called upon to introduce Remedial Legislation whether he liked it or not. This was not only an insult to the parliament and people of Canada but to the Queen herself. What is the parliament of this country? It is the people of Canada. There is no power under heaven can dictate to the parliament in Canada how she will govern herself. The parliament of Canada is as free as the great parliament of Westminster. It was an insult to her majesty, the brightest soverign the world has ever produced, that she dictates to us how we shall be governed. We had the power to govern ourselves according to responsible Government, and Parliament has the power to either reject or accept the Remedial Bill. To have a man like Tupper, our Prime Minister, tell us that the Queen commanded us to establ Separate Schools was an insult to our intelligence. You would think the people of Canada never saw a newspaper and couldn't read, to hear him talk.

No! the trouble does not lie with the Privy Council or the Queen. The secret lies in the fact that Tupper has made a bargain with the Hierarchy of Quebec to do their bidding for the votes they could give them.

Mr. McCarthy referred to the men chosen by Sir Charles in forming his cabinet. The Quebec wing of it were chosen not because of their peculiar fitness, but because they were all zealous churchmen.

Referring to the mandement issued by the Hierarchy he asked the audience if revenue tariff. A change of governm couldn't be a disadvantage to this count He was not a man to conceal his thoug He would not fail to record his vote agai Tupper, and no bugaboo about Ladrier coming in and being worse would frighten him.

The speaker then referred briefly to the Curran Bridge and other steals, and showed how money had been stolen in broad daylight in front of the minister himself. He referred to the Soulanges scandal and the part taken by Sir Hibbert Tupper, whom he termed "a little whippersnapper," and asked in view of this how they could possible be worse off by a change of government. You don't know what may turn up—I may be trumpe.

Mr. McCarthy referred briefly to his trade policy. He said he was in favor of leaving our tariff as it was against the Americans until they lowered theirs to us. He recognized the benefit of access to the the American market, however, and would go for a fair reciprocity treaty with them. For everything they would admit into their county free we would admit free into ours. He was in favor of lowering our tariff with the mother country. He said our present tariff discriminates against England in favor of the Americans. Our present tariff kept out English goods, and this was hard on our farmers. When they wished to ship their products to the old land they had to pay the cost of transportation both ways, as on account of our tariff the ships that took our goods to England came back empty. He was in favor of two scales of duties — maintaining our present tariff against the States till they lower theirs, and reducing it to a revenue tariff for England.

The speaker brought his excellent address to a close by calling upon them to grant him this little encouragement in the fight he was waging: add one man from Lennox, to my party of two, pledged to oppose Remedial Legislation, to support me in the 8th parliament of Canada. (Cheers.)

Mr. M. C. Bogart, in a neat address, moved a resolution that a mass meeting be held in the town hall here on Tuesday afternoon next for the purpose of forming a McCarthy club. It was seconded by W. S. Detlor and unanimously carried.

Mr. J. T. Grange, in a catchy address, moved a vote of thanks to Mr. McCarthy, which was seconded by W. S. Herrington, who said he admired Mr. McCarthy for his honesty and bravery. The motion was carried amid much applause.

Mr. McCarthy gracefully responded and gave his views on the Senate and superannuation system, which were touched on by Mr. Grange in his address.

Mr. Chas. Stevens begged leave to read his platform which he had finished in the interim and created considerable merriment by saying that in the matter of trade "McCarthy practically endorsed his sentiments on that question." To which Mr. McCarthy responded that he had done very well seeing that he had never seen or heard of Mr. Stevens' platform or views on the question before.

The meeting disbanded with hearty cheers for Mr. McCarthy and the Queen.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, MAY 22, 1896.

THE Beaver complains in its last issue that Mr. Dawson, as was his privilege, sent from Ottawa post free copies of his great speech to every elector in his riding. The Beaver will never have occasion to complain of Uriah Wilson doing anything of the kind. Uriah's "great speeches" consist in bobbing up to record his vote when Tupper pulls the string. It is a matter of deep regret that Mr. Dawson could not find time to confer a similar favor upon the electors of Lennox.

"IN the past many incapable and inexperienced men have rode into place and power on mere party cries."—Beaver, May 15th, 1896. It is refreshing to read such confessions in the columns of our contemporary. No one is better qualified to speak on that subject and no better illustration of a voting machine being sent to parliament on a party cry could be produced than Mr. Wilson. The Beaver might have made a clean breast of it and added "In Lennox the Tupper-Caron reptile fiend has also been known to render material assistance."

The loyalty of the Liberals is not the empty lip loyalty of the Tuppers, and their hungry followers who are now making a last desperate attempt for the spoils of office. It was a Liberal Mr. Davies' who moved in the House of Commons that: "Inasmuch as great Britain admits the products of Canada into her ports free of duty, this house is of the opinion that the present scale of duties exacted on goods mainly imported from Great Britain should be reduced." This motion was defeated by the lip loyal-existence on the passing of the Remedial Bill. Mr. Wilson dare not openly admit that he favors that bill although in the secret work of the committee he did all in his power to enforce its passage. Tupper and his government defended the releasing of Connolly and McGreevy from gaol to which they had been committed for plundering the public treasury, and we are sorry to say that Uriah Wilson held up his hand when the vote to whitewash their fallen conspirators was passed in the House. Surely Mr. Wilson does not think the electors of Lennox are all blind to the course he is following. With the exception of a few who are interested in drawing their salaries out of the country's treasury he finds now that all of his old conservative friends are deserting him. Bitterly he complains that his party is going back on him. Is it to be wondered at? There is such a thing as presuming too much upon the gullability of the electors. Partyism may be well enough so long as it is not carried too far. There was a time when the Conservative party could with some degree of logic make out a fair case. It is true we never did agree with the argument presented in support of that case, still it was a case that had to be met with argument and time has proven that the policy of the Conservative party was not suited to our country. Now, however there is absolutely no argument that can be presented in support of the ruinous course pursued by the government. Everyone admits that Tupper is a spendthrift and is corrupt to the core. No one, not even Uriah Wilson himself, believes in his bullying and extravagance It is conceded on all sides that he is stirring up a religious and racial warefare tending towards the disruption of confederation Why then should such a man be retained in power? Why should any honest man of any political persuasion vote for Uriah Wilson who is striving to keep such a man at the head of our affairs? The Conservatives of Lennox remember that Sir Charles Tupper is the man who promised to reduce our public debt. Instead of reducing it the policy that he is favoring has nearly doubled it until now the public debt is over a million dollars for every riding in Canada. It would be well to reflect for a momemt upon this question of debt. How often do the electors of Lennox stop to consider this? The riding of Lennox to-day is practically mortgaged by our government for over $1,000,000. This is not an imaginary debt but a first mortgage upon the assets of every man, woman and child in Lennox. In the face of this great debt we find Uriah Wilson soliciting your support to enable him to keep in power a man who is strutting about this country scattering with a lavish hand millions of dollars here and there for all manner of wild-cat schemes, solely with a view of corrupting the electors.

If every farm in the township of Ernestown were put up at auction today and sold at the current prices of real estate to meet this public debt and the private mortgages against them, they would not realize enough to do it. These are startling facts, but facts they are which can be verified by anyone who will take the trouble to consult the assessment roll. In the face of this we find this blustering old man who has fattened himself and all his relatives at the public trough, laying his plans for the expenditure of tens of millions more. In the face of this we find Uriah Wilson endeavoring to persuade the electors of Lennox that they are prosperous and that it is to their interests to help him retain in power this prince of corruption. There is hope yet for the country when we find that the electors are able to break loose from the former party allegiance and to speak out like men that they are done with Tupper and Tupperism.

to each end of the bag the stone could be dispensed with, and the promising lad ran to his father with the news. The father, after duly surveying the situation, broke out like this: "You get de stone right away and put him into de bag. Your fader and grandfader always went to mill mit de stone in de bag and you shust go dat way too. Dat is too much smardness in a poy." Now, Mr. C., I think each generation ought to be an improvement on the preceding one, else there would be no progress in the world. We ought to do a little better than our fathers did in voting as well as in everything else. I cannot see that I ought to vote just as my father did or that you ought to do so. Nor can I see that I ought or that you ought to vote just as you did 30 years ago or 5 years ago. Circumstances are continually changing and the wise man adapts himself to them, and adjusts himself to his environment. C.—That is true, but I am rather old now to be changing, and, as I said before, I am not much interested in the questions up. P.—But are you not interested in justice and right? Have you no concern about morality or honesty? You are a religious man—a member of the church—and yet you say if you vote at all in this election you will vote Conservative and that means voting for Tupperism with all that it implies. It means sanctioning by your vote corruption, bribery, boodling, lying, dishonesty, looting of the public treasure, treason to each other and to the country by a "nest of traitors," and other iniquities almost too numerous to enumerate. What I want to know is how you can reconcile giving your vote to sanction and continue all that with your ideas of religion and morality. Leaving aside for the moment coercion, tariffs and debts, which you do not appear to be much concerned in, you surely must be concerned in right and wrong among neighbors. How, then, as a moral and religious man can you bring yourself to give your sanction at the polls to the iniquities of Tupperism as I have just enumerated them? C.—I do not see it that way. I think you will do me the justice to admit that I believe in morality and honesty and try to practise them, P.—I do admit that and believe it, and holding as I do that opinion of you I cannot understand how you and many others can go to the poll and stultify yourselves by voting for the aforesaid boodlers, traitors and corruptionists. Is your moral and religious creed merely a Sunday or church affair to be left at home when you start to vote? Or do you accept the jesuitical maxim that everything is right in politics and war, and that the voter need have no scruples any more than the boodler. C.—You are going too fast. I am no jesuit, and believe in doing the right thing all the time, Sunday and Monday, on the farm and at the poll. I don't admit that in voting for the government I am voting for everything that's bad as you say. That's the Grit and Patron opinion of the government you are giving now. If these charges were true, the doctrine you are preaching would keep about half of the voters away from the polls, that is, they would have to stay away or vote Grit or Patron. This is the old story over again—Tories are very bad and Grits very good, and Patrons are still better. I think they are all pretty much alike. If half of these charges against the government could be proved true I would not vote for a government candidate. Mr. Wilson is a respectable man and a pious man, and it is not likely he would continue to support a government with all the sins you lay at their door. P.—I understand you to say if half the charges against the government can be proved you will not vote for Mr. Wilson or any other government candidate. Will you stick to that? C.—Yes, I will. proper authorities to expel a man from the church who so ignores public morality and public honesty? C.—I would not care to go that far. To proceed on that principle a good many public men would deserve expulsion as well as Mr. Wilson—that is, assuming that these charges are all true which I cannot yet admit. P.—Well, assuming that they are true, in your opinion ought not these men to be expelled from the churches? Is it not one of the legitimate functions of the churches, and is it not the plain duty of the churches to uphold and conserve public morality and official honesty and righteousness as well as private and individual righteousness and honesty among their members? C.—Yes, I think it is, but it is doubtful whether the churches would deem it good policy to go that length. P.—Do you mean to say then, that the churches as well as the politicians are governed by policy rather than principles—that expediency is to take the place of right? C.—No, I don't mean to say that, but the question is a difficult one. P.—Well, leaving that aside, if you are not clear as to the duty of the churches in these premises, you ought at least to be clear as to your own duty, and I shall hold you as an honorable man to your compact to vote against Mr. Wilson and the Tupper government after I have placed in your hands the documentary evidence of all the charges against the most corrupt government of modern times. Good-day Mr. C.

Thus ended a colloquy which was friendly throughout, but the end of the results of it has not come yet. I shall send C. the EXPRESS which will doubtless be ready to publish any correction or comments he may choose to make.

motion was defeated by the tip loyalists, on the vote standing 64 in favor and 98 against. Mr. Wilson voted against granting this concession to the mother country, and we find his organ, The Beaver, doing all in its power to decry Great Britain and the free trade policy that has made her powerful and prosperous.

We have repeatedly alluded to the manner in which the farmer is discriminated against by the Tupper government. The Canadain manufacturer is granted a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty on all material entering into the construction of implements intended for export abroad, but when the same make of goods are sold to the farmers of Canada, no such concession is granted. But the government even go further than this in their effort to furnish cheap implements to the foreign competitors of our farmers. In 1893 an act was passed granting $125,000 yearly for a monthly line of steamers from British Columbia to Australia to supply cheap rates to Australia for Canadian manufacturers. The farmer has to pay the lion's share of the $125,000 in order that the Australian farmer one of his strongest competitors, may be furnished with cheap agricultural implements much cheaper than the Canadian farmer can purchase them at home. These bonused ships on their return trip from Australia bring back at a low rate, cheap Australian mutton, meats, butter, wool, tallow, hides, etc, which are thrown on our market to the injury of the Canadian farmer.

The farmers of Canada are already groaning under a load of debt and excessive taxation, but their present condition will not be a comparison to what will follow if Sir Chas. Tupper is returned to power at the next election. The country's credit would be pledged for all kinds of wild cat schemes, boodling would run riot, and Canada would receive a shock from which it would take her long years to recover.

In a recent speech Sir Chas. Tupper took occasion to say that our trade with Great Britain had greatly increased under the N. P. Sir Charles neglected to say that our debt to Britain had also greatly increased and that a large percentage of our products have to be shipped to the old country annually to pay the interest on mortgages and money borrowed from and held by English capitalists.

MR. WILSON'S UNIQUE POSITION.

The present position of Uriah Wilson is extremely ludicrous. If Mr. Wilson were to go up to the station some day and board the express train going east and declare to the fellow passengers and the outlookers that he was really travelling in a westerly direction his friends would pronounce him out of his head, and try to reason with him that if he boards a train travelling eastward he certainly must go in that direction. If however he persisted in his declaration that he was surely travelling westerly and as proof of the fact called upon his friends to witness that although he was on the east bound train he had turned his seat around so that he was facing towards the west, they would certainly send for the police and hand him over to a keeper. Yet this is exactly what Mr. Wilson is doing every day. He has cast in his lot with the government and is doing all he can to retain Sir Charles Tupper in power. Of all men on earth Tupper is the last that Mr. Wilson should support, for it is an open secret that he detests the man and his whole family. Tupper and his government are pledged to grant millions of dollars to a railway to the ice-bound regions of Hudson Bay. Mr. Wilson is pleading for that government and dare not say that he favors such a gigantic robbery. Tupper and are done with Tupper and Tupperism. Dozens, yes scores of old time Conservatives are now outspoken in their convictions and are telling Mr. Wilson to his face that if he casts in his lot with Tupper they have no further use for him. Uriah Wilson spent a most uncomfortable week in endeavoring to explain to the electors his vote in committee on the Remedial Bill. Sir Charles Tupper congratulated him in the House for helping him in his effort to force the bill through. It may be very nice to receive the personal congratulations and applause of a premier, but it is not so nice to be told by the humble elector that he cannot tolerate that sort of thing. There is no use in whining, Mr. Wilson! You had a chance and a fair chance to represent the electors of Lennox at Ottawa, but you betrayed their confidence and now you must take your reward. It was all very fine to strut about Ottawa a few weeks ago arm in arm with Tupper and his gang and laugh in your sleeve at the electors of Lennox. You will find out now that the electors have been fooled for the last time.

THE ETHICS OF POLITICS. A DIALOGUE.

To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.

Dear Sir,—The following politico-religious colloquy, which took place recently between a good Conservative neighbor and myself, may make interesting and useful reading at this critical juncture of our time when party is placed before principle, honesty and justice ignored, and religion disregarded in the affairs of state by our rulers at Ottawa. While I cannot give the conversation exactly verbatim, it is according to my recollection substantially correct in every particular, and I shall gladly accept any proper correction or addition which the party of the other part may choose to make after reading my version of it in these columns, as I shall send him the paper.

P.—How do you feel over the elections Mr. C? C.—Oh I hardly know, I am not taking much interest in the thing. P.—But you will take enough interest to cast your vote, will you not? C.—I think not. P.—But it is the duty of every good citizen to vote, especially when such great questions are in issue as at present—questions which vitally concern every citizen, and especially ourselves, the farmers. C.—I am not much concerned with the school question, no matter which way it goes. P.—But you are concerned with the trade question, are you not, and with the expenditure, and the alarming increase of our debt? C.—Yes, of course, but I don't think I shall vote at all, I am not affected much one way or the other. P.—But I think every citizen is affected, not only materially but morally, and every voter has a moral duty to perform at the polls in this election apart from his material interests. I think it is your duty to vote. C.—But I don't see why you should be anxious for me to vote, for you know I vote Conservative. P.—And do you tell me that if you do vote on the 23rd of next month (as I think you will) that you will vote for the Tupper government? C.—Certainly I will, I never voted Grit or Patron or anything but Conservative. P.—And do you consider that a good reason why you never should vote any other way? Do you never change your mind on any subject as you get new light? Do you stick to what your fathers did in everything else as well as voting? Your father and mine used to cut the hay with a hand scythe and the grain with a hand "cradle," but now we both have mowers and reapers. A little further back they used, some of them, to put the grain in one end of the bag and a stone in the other to balance it over the horse's back to go to mill. A son of one of those old codgers discovered you stick to that? C.—Yes, I will. P.—Very well, the whole of these charges can be proved, and I shall furnish you with the proof, and then I shall expect you to vote against that government. First, you will admit that they are traitors, for they have called each other traitors and nobody outside knows them as well as they know each other. And Tupper is a traitor to his country because he is striving or pretending to strive to force a system of separate schools on Manitoba, which he does not believe in himself, and which he knows to be inimical to the country, solely and only to retain the support of the Quebec hierarchy to keep himself in power. And of course any ruler who will barter away the interests, peace and welfare of his country in order to keep himself in power and pay is a traitor to his country. By the same token and a hundred others is he dishonest and corrupt. With the coercion bill he bribes the hierarchy to drive their people to the polls to support him, while he himself, within a week, has attempted openly to bribe and corrupt the great North West by offering them millions of the people's money in return for votes. For proof positive that the Government which has for so long reigned at Ottawa was and is steeped in corruption I direct your attention to the records—not Grit or Patron assertions but the written and official records with which I shall supply you. You have doubtless heard of the McGreevy-Connolly revelation in Parliament in 1891, You have heard of the Curran Bridge plundering, of the Lake St. John bnsiness, the Tay Canal Little Rapids Lock, Cornwall Canal, Sheik's Island Dam, the Langevin Block, the Printing Scandal, Fredericton Bridge, and so on to the end of the long list of rotten rascalities. That Government under the moral pressure of public opinion, made a milk and water show of condemnation and punishment against these flagrant and proved offenders, as you must know, but in the case of Sir Adolphe Caron (a minister of the crown) they proved themselves corrupt as a body and as a government individually and collectively. That minister was by a parliamentry tribunal, convicted and proved to have corruptly received $20,000 of what was virtually public money out of the subsidies to the St. John Railway Co., to bribe and corrupt certain constituencies in Quebec. The case was so clear that to deny it were useless, and sir, that member of the government and minister of the crown, (with a knighthood) had the effrontery and moral turpitude to admit the charge and aver that he would do the same thing again, if necessary. Did that government turn him out or resign in a body? Not a bit of it! He kept his place as minister of the crown and not a member of that government resigned his place. If this does not prove that the whole government was corrupt what proof do you want or what do you call proof? C.—I heard something about it, but did not suppose it was so bad as that. Can you give me the documents that set out the facts? P.—Yes, I shall place before you what will satisfy you. Hansard and the report of the parliamentary committee which the government was forced to appoint to investigate the matter are the official documents containing the proof; and as to the non-expulsion and non-resignation every body knows that Caron remained and nobody resigned. Now, you said a minute ago that as Mr. Wilson is a respectable man and a member of the church he would not be likely to sanction these things and support a government of that kind. Should you find that he really has done so—that the charges are all true and proved, (and I intend to place the evidence before you) will you consider it your duty not only to vote against him and

To the thousands on the broad road of suffering from troubles such as rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, liver and kidney affections, nervousness, heart and blood diseases, we would say, use a few bottles of Paine's Celery Compound faithfully according to directions. It will surely cure you and restore you to your former good health.

Remember that delays are dangerous; the symptoms of to-day may to-morrow result in misery or death. To be well and stong, and able to battle successfully with life's duties, cares and troubles, you must use Paine's Celery Compound, the medicine that has done such marvellous things for thousands in the past.

When buying Paine's Celery Compound, be careful to avoid the dealer who, for the sake of profit, would have you take a worthless medicine. Keep clear of such merchants and dealers who deceive you and imperil your life.

Mr. A. Budd, of Shanty Bay, Ont., who was quickly and wonderfully cured by Paine's Celery Compound, writes as follows:

"For the benefit of sufferers I gladly give my experience with Paine's Celery Compound. After suffering from dyspepsia for thirty-five years, and meeting with many failures with other medicines, I decided to use Paine's Celery Compound, having heard of so many cures effected by it. The Compound, after I used it for a time, produced miraculous results and banished my troubles.

"From a condition of helplessness—being unable to eat or sleep—I now feel well and strong. I am astonished at the results as my trouble was an old and chronic one. I have recommended Paine's Celery Compound to some of my neighbors, and in every case it has given satisfaction. I will always strongly recommend its use when I have opportunity."

HEADACHE

A SIMPLE CURE.

As a sure cure for headache, whether caused by liver, stomach, kidney or nerve trouble, Burdock Blood Bitters is the most effective medicine known. It removes the cause of headache by restoring all the organs of the system to proper action and health. Doubts disappear in view of proofs like this:

In the spring of 1891 I got a bottle of B. B. B. for my mother who had been troubled for twenty-five years with sick headache. I got it from Mr. W. Paxton Baird, of Woodstock, N. B. who gave me two other medicines to take home and let my mother take her choice. Fortunately she chose the Burdock Blood Bitters, and I returned the other bottles. She used it for three months, and has had no headache since. We are sure that it was B. B. B. cured her, as she took no other medicine.

POTATOES.

The Results of a Timely Bulletin on the Culture of the Tuber.

The United States Agricultural Department has just issued a bulletin on potato culture, which we summarize as follows:

First, a rich, sandy loam, well drained, and well supplied with vegetable matter, is the best soil for potatoes. Stiffer soils should be made light with green manuring and under-draining or deep ploughing. If commercial fertilizers are used, those containing superphosphates and a large amount of potash should be selected; potash best in the form of sulphate.

Second, In cutting potatoes for seed, regard should be had to the size of the piece rather than to the number of eyes. A single eye is sufficient, if it has large backing. If seed is near the value of the expected crop, large pieces of three or four ounces are recommended. Small potatoes, if used, should not be cut.

Third. For a large yield, planting should be in deep furrows or trenches, four or five inches deep and covered without ridging; deep planting for late potatoes better resists drought. For early yield, planting at three inches with ridging, produces better results, but smaller crop.

Fourth, Harrowing with a drag or overturned harrow, as soon as the first sprouts appear above ground, will destroy the weeds which have started and assist the growth of the potato.

Fifth. The time for planting will depend upon the soil and climate, which the selection of the best varieties, must depend upon the judgment and experience of the farmer himself.

For Protecting Newly Set Plants.

The sketch herewith shows a simple contrivance. Short pieces of board a foot long and nine inches wide are sharpened as shown in the diagram, and to these are tacked long strips of cheap cotton cloth. Drawn tightly, and the sharpened ends pressed down into the earth, a fine protection is afforded plants that have

A Good Deal in a Few Words. "I paid a Toronto specialist on catarrh a large sum of money but I got no benefit. I tried them all, but finally, almost in despair, and assuredly without any faith, I tried Chase's Catarrh Cure. It is all that it is recommended, which is saying a good deal in a few words." When you see a man digging in his yard very slowly and often stopping to rest, he is digging up a flower bed for his wife. If he digs fast and never stops, he is digging worms for his fish bait.

Money No Object. The amount of money sufferers from catarrh will spend in attempting to cure that foul and disagreeable disease is almost incredible. J. W. Jennings, of Gilford, Ont., says: "I spent between $200 and $300 consulting doctors; I tried all the 'treatments' without benefit. One box of Chase's Catarrh Cure did me more good than all the remedies. A 25c. box cured me." Don't waste money. Chase's Cure, with improved blower, 25c. It cures.

The best analytical chemists in the world affirm without hesitation that Diamond Dyes are the purest and best dyestuffs for home dyeing. All the colors are fast to light and washing, and will color more goods, package for package, than any other dye in the world.

As there are many imitations of the popular Diamond Dyes, ladies should beware of dealers who attempt to recommend the worthless goods. It should be remembered that the imitation dyes are made up of poisonous and dangerous adulterations, and the hands are often ruined by their use. Diamond Dyes are so easy to use that even a child can work with them successfully. See that you get the "Diamond," and refuse all others.

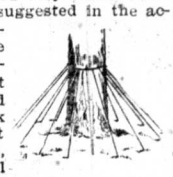
protection is afforded plants that have just been transplanted. White cloth, especially, reflects the sun's rays and keeps all cool beneath it. If a long strip of cloth is used, put a bit of sharpened board every eight feet. Cotton can be had at a few cents a yard, and three strips can be made from a piece of ordinary width.—American Agriculturist.

Dewberries

Dewberries ripen earliest on gravel, but do better generally on loamy soil. Early planting is best, but it can be done when the plants are 6 inches high, if care be exercised to keep the roots wet—they must not be allowed to dry. In planting, make a shallow furrow with a one-horse plow. In cultivating, lay the vines over in the row to avoid tearing them out or breaking them off with the plow. They root from the tip and when ready to do this show it by the change of color on the tip and also its enlargement. Prune in the spring only after the buds haev started, cutting the vines back to 3 feet. The first year leave 1 to 3 canes, afterward 4 to 6. I use a wire trellis of three wires, the top wire 3 feet from the ground. Shallow culture is best and never cultivate when vines are blooming. After picking no further cultivation is done. berry is very large and fine and bears shipment reasonably well, does not turn red as the bush blackberries do. Pick every alternate day, beginnong about July 1, and latsing two weeks.—Farm and Home.

Novel Support for Sweet Peas.

A bed of sweet peas about a tree trunk can be trained very satisfactorily in the manner suggested in the accompanying illustration, says the American Agriculturist. A stout bit of cord is tied about the trunk some three feet from the ground, and from equal spaces about it strings are carried out and down to the ground, where they are secured by pegs driven into the ground, these pegs forming a perfect circle about the tree. When the plants have secured a hold upon the strings and have come to blossoming, the effect will be very pleasing and attractive.



SWEET PEA SUPPORT.

Insect Destruction Prevented.

Gardeners are often pestered by small insects eating young plants. To prevent the destruction, nail two half hoops together at the centre and sharpen the ends. Press the end into the ground over the plants and throw over them cotton mosquito netting or cheese cloth. The edges may be held down by drawing dirt on them. Such protection is better than boxes, as it lets in air and sunlight. The frames can be kept for use from year to year.—Webb Donnell, in Farm and Home.

POULTRY HOUSE.

One That is Recommended by an Expert Poultry Grower.

At a farmers' institute meeting in Thorndale, Middlesex County, a short time ago, Mr. J. E. Meyers, a poultry expert, was asked what sort of a hen house was best, to which he replied: "Shelter is an important consideration in locating a house. For 100 hens, it should be 15 by 40 feet, having a 3-foot entry. This allows six square feet for each hen, which is little enough to be profitable. This space should be divided into 3 compartments, as about 33 hens is all that should be in one flock. Build the house facing the south; five feet high on south side and six at north. One-third of the south side should be glass, doubled in winter and shaded in summer. In building, put on an inside and outside coat of tar paper and line the roof with heavy building paper to avoid sudden changes of inside temperature."

Figs. I. and II. (re-engraved from "Low Cost Poultry Houses," by Darrow), represent a house 38x10 feet, eight feet high in front and six feet in the rear. 1-1 represents a platform over which the roosts are places. Over the platform, beneath which are the nests, nail kegs, with one side out, will answer, or whatever else is thought beeter. The bone boxes are for bravel, bondes, oyster shells, etc.

In building the house use either 2x4 or 3x4 scantling for posts, sills and framework. Hemlock inch lumber will answer for siding, and roof sheeting. The cracks should be battoned with 1x3 and the roof should be covered with standard roofing paper, properly cleated and given two coats roofing paint. It is necessary to line the house with common lumber, covered with tarred paper fastened on with laths. The platform should be about 2 1-2 feet high and 7 feet long. In front of platform make a door 1 foot high and 7 feet long, through which to get the eggs from nests. The top of platform should be on hinges, so as to be easily raised out of the way when it is necessary to clean behind it. No further explanation is necessary, as the figures are self-explanatory.

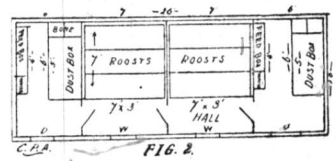

FIG. 2.

A GOOD POULTRY HOUSE.

We would recommend that all poultry houses face the south and have ecplour yards attached. It is well to plant one or two fruit trees in a poultry yard, as they will furnish shade in summer and the insects which visit the trees will be destroyed by the hens if they come within reach. The writer has seen plum trees in a poultry yard so heavily laden that it was necessary to prop very many of the large limbs to save them from breaking.—Farmer's Advocate.

Care of Young Chickens.

The hen may know a great deal about the proper care of young chicks, but she'll get along a great deal better if you give her a little help occasionally.

When the chicks begin to hatch you can occasionally help them along, after they have 'pipped' the egg, by mak-

Old Rip Van Winkle went up into the Catskill mountains to take a little nap of twenty years or so, and when he wakened, he found that the "cruel war was over," the monthly magazines had "fought it over" the second time and "blown up" all the officers that had participated in it. This much is history, and it is also an historical fact that, during the same length of time, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery had become the most celebrated, as it is the most effective, Liver, Blood and Lung Remedy of the age. In purifying the blood and in all manner of pimples, blotches, eruptions, and other skin and scalp diseases, scrofulous sores and swellings, and kindred ailments, the "Golden Medical Discovery" manifests the most positive curative properties.

Every disorder that can be reached through the blood, yields to its purifying qualities. Besides, it builds up wholesome flesh and strength; not merely fat like filthy Cod liver oil and its nasty "emulsions" but solid flesh.

A scrofulous condition of the blood invites catarrh, bronchitis, and consumption. We're all exposed to the germs of consumption, grip and malaria—yet only the weak ones suffer. When you're weak, tired out, and debilitated, or when pimples and blotches appear—heed the warning in time. The "Golden Medical Discovery" sets all the organs into healthy action—especially the liver, and that's the point of entrance for these germs. Then if the blood be pure, they'll be thrown off. There's no risk.

CAUTION.—Accept no substitute for the "Golden Medical Discovery" that may be recommended to be "just as good." It may be better for the dealer, because of paying him a better profit, but he is not the one who needs help.

THE APIARY.

The Modus Operandi of Transferring a Colony to a Frame Hive.

If colonies have been purchased in box hives, they should be transferred to the frame hive as soon as a seasonable opportunity presents itself.

Early in the season it is not a difficult matter to drive bees from their combs, cut out the latter and fit them into their frames. If combs thus fitted in are temporarily held in place in the frames, the bees, under whose care they should be placed at once, will fasten them securely in a few hours or days at most. Fig. 1. shows the method of procedure. Towards the middle of a pleasant day, about the end of April or 1st of May, blow smoke into the hive to be transferred, and after the bees have been given a few minutes to fill up with honey, invert the hive and place over the open end the frame hive. By rapping continuously for some minutes on the hive, the bees will be impelled to leave it and cluster in the upper box. The hive thus vacated may then be taken into a closed room and one side pried off, to facilitate the removal of the combs. The box containing the bees is to be placed meanwhile on the spot originally occupied by the box hive, the bees being allowed to go in and out without restraint, only two pre-

PROGRESS OF ELECTRICITY.

The Wonderful Marvels Now Seen at a Modern Electrical Exhibition.

At the Electrical Exposition in New York last week were seen marvels of which poets, in their wildest imaginings have never dreamed, and the wonderful fluid that we know by the name of electricity, chained and made to do man's work, aye, and woman's, too, even to performing such ordinary household functions as baking biscuits and ironing clothes. What the average visitor asked to see first was the X-ray display, and, when satisfied with this, he rushed across the hall to view Niagara and hear the thunder of the falls. Of course, the exhibition was most useful to practical electricians, who find in these "fairy tales of science" and "long results of time," helpful suggestions and information in the way of business. These gentlemen know all about kilowats, ampheres, dyamos and induction coils, which are "caviare to the general," but whether the visitor was seeking scientific information or simply wishing to be amused and instructed, this wonderful collection of what would have been regarded as miracles twenty-five years ago, can be relied upon to meet almost every possible wish in this direction. And still we are told that we are only in the infancy of electrical discovery—having yet scarcely crossed the threshhold of the marvelous temple that it will be the privlege of posterity to enter and inhabit.

The Zerograph.

The zerograph, an instrument in appearance very much like an ordinary typewriter, is being used in England for transmitting or receiving telegraph messages. One machine is employed at each end of the line. In sending a telegraphic message no special training is required. The operator depresses in turn the keys of what appears to be an ordinary typewriter keyboard, with the usual arrangement of the letters. The depression of a key closes the connection of a local battery of from five to ten small accumulators, which causes a current to flow, not only actuating the printing and inking mechanism of the trasmitting istrument, but also closing the line circuit, which, in its turn, completes the local circuit of the receiving instrument. The two machines are thus simultaneously actuated, and as the operator presse the key he not only prints the message on his own instrument, but makes an exact reproduction upon the receiving instrument. As soon as the end of a line is reached the machine automatically moves the paper forward, and, releasing a spring, causes the paper roller to move along ready for the first letter to strike at the commencement of a new line. The machine is thus perfectly automatic in its action, and may safely be left to take care of itself at the receiving end, the message as received being printed on the roll of paper without any attention being required.

The Efficiency of Steam Turbines.

The steam turbine is attracting the attention of engineers to a growing extent, and reports come from abroad of really surprising results. At the Bordeaux exhibition a 100-hourse power De Laval turbine ran on 21 pounds of steam per hour per horse power on a seven hour test, with 113 pounds initial pressure and 26 inches of vacuum. With a load of 50 horse power the consumption per horse power increased to only 23.27 pounds. A satisfactory item as bearing upon the continued efficiency is that after nine months of use the turbine generated a horse power on 19.53 pounds. At Troyes a two-horse power turbine, running with only 71 pounds initial developed a horse power on the same amount—19.58. When it is remembered that these are brake, not indicated horse power, it will be recognized that these performance more than equal the recorded duties of sim-hen should be removed and placed under an old blanket in a basket set near the kitchen fire. If left in the nest they are liable to be killed before the hen comes off. When you remove the chicks, take out the empty shells also.

Don't let a hen run around all summer with two or three, or even half a dozen chicks. Take them from her, and at night slip them under another hen.

Don't feed the young chicks during the first twenty-four hours of their existence unless there is one that seems on the point of collapse. In this case a little warm milk poured down the throat will have a revivifying effect.

After the first day the chicks want plenty of food and want it often. For the first week we feed stale bread soaked in warm milk, and then squeezed dry. Slop is a good thing for hogs, but not for chickens. A little cayenne pepper may be added for an occasional stimulation.

Under no circumstances should young chickens ever be fed corn meal that has been mixed with cold water. If you have nothing but corn meal, scald it before feeding, or better still make a corn bread, season with a pinch of salt and cayenne and feed it crumbled up.

As soon as the young chicks can take whole grain, give them whole wheat. It's the best chicken feed in the world.

It doesn't pay to let the hen and her brood run at large, unless it is for a little time in the middle of the day over a limited range. Keep the hen cooped up, and above all things, keep the coop clean.

Don't feed at one time more than the hen and chicks will eat up clean. Feed often and in small quantities should be the rule.—Farm News.

Fence Filosphy.

The hired man finds the rail fence an easy resting place, but that isn't exactly what a fence is built for.

A good farmer keeps the weeds and briers out of his fence corners; but the time spent in fighting weeds in the corners of an old rail fence would pay for a modern fence in a few years.

It isn't always safe to judge a man's character by the clothes he wears, but you can usually determine pretty closely what kind of a farmer a man is by looking at his fences.

CONCLUSIVE PROOF.

From a Well Known Citizen.

"My daughter Polly, has for more than a year been troubled with severe symptoms of kidney disease. She had constant and acute pains in her back. The pain in her head was fearful and almost unendurable. It frequently prevented her from attending school, and she found study at home practically impossible. She had no appetite, and did not sleep well. The pain was very severe around her heart and she was much troubled with fluttering and palpitation. She was completely worn out in body and was tired and drowsy all the time. Her mother and myself became seriously alarmed as she was constantly getting worse.

"Last July my daughter Sarah, a teacher in the Public School at Kingsville, Ont., came home to spend her vacation, and finding her sister in such a distressing and dangerous condition, said, I am taking Doan's Kidney Pills and they are doing me much good, I have a box with me and will divide with Polly, which she did. By the time Polly had finished the half box her improvement in health was so marked, that I procured more from Mr. Fraleigh's drug store.

Her full restoration to health and spirits was rapid and continuous. She has now none of her former dangerous, painful and distressing kidney troubles. She eats and sleeps well, and for more than a month has enjoyed the most vigorous health. She has not lost a day at school since she commenced taking the pills, and has so much faith in them since they restored her to full health that she wants me to keep six boxes in the house all the time, in case they should be needed and not available. Her cure has been so wonderful she thinks they will cure any complaint. If the pills had cost $10.00 a box, I would not have begrudged the money. The restoration of my daughter to full health and strong girlhood, from her former serious sickness, etc., has made her mother, myself and daughter a happy family.

"I make this sworn statement with the full approbation of my wife and daughter, voluntarily and without any urging or inducement whatever, to show the gratitude my daughter, wife and myself feel for the wonderful cure wrought by the Doan Kidney Pills. We have not the least doubt that her trying the pills just at the time she did saved us a large doctor's bill, as she was all but sick abed at the time. shade the box well and provide for ventilation by propping it up from the bottom and leaving also a slight opening at the top.

In filling the frames with combs, cut from a box hive the largest and straightest sheets having the most sealed worker brood in them, and so cut that the frame will fit over them snugly, taking pains so far as possible to have the comb placed in the frame in the same position as it was built. The comb, if not heavy, can be held in place temporarily by slender wire nails pushed through holes punched in the side of the top bars. In many instances the comb when pressed into the frame will seem so firm as not to need nails or sticks, but in the heat of the hive, and with the weight of the bees that will cluster on it to repair the cut edges and fasten them to the bars, unsupported combs are very apt to give way, creating disastrous confusion. Thus the strips as shown at Fig. II. should always be used.—Frank Benton, M.S., in Honey Bee Manual, issued by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Spring Management.

A beekeeper would be as imprudent to have his forces too strong too early, as would the farmer who would have his harvest hands waiting on expense a week or two before his wheat was ready to reap. Perhaps not quite so bad, but it will do for an illustration.

If it is remembered that a bee is in the egg from about three days, in the larva form about six days, and in the chrysalis form about 12 days, making a period of 21 days from the egg to the perfect bee, and that then from 12 to 16 days after being hatched it goes to the field as a honey-gatherer, you can calculate when it will be necessary to commence getting your forces ready to gather the honey crop. It will be better to have them strong a few days too soon than a few days too late for very often the honey crop that is gathered is collected in a very few days. Especially is this true of white clover and basswood.

At the beginning of the honey flow our hives ought to be full and running over with bees and brood if we would reap the best results.

The queen, of her own choice, lays her eggs in a circle, or rather globe fashion; so if the brood nest is to one side of the hive, move the frames with the brood to the centre of the hive, then the brood nest will be spread alike toward the outer edge of the hive. By attending to these little things very much can be done toward increasing your forces. By giving the queen a fair chance, if she is a good one, you will have no trouble to have a hive full of bees to gather the harvest.

Should you have a very weak colony, with a good queen, it will help very much if you will put the queen and bees on about three frames, to the center of the hive, with division boards on each side, and if chaff division boards were used t would be all the better, to retain all the heat possible in the hive, being sure, of course, to have honey in the frames.

The entrance should be closed to about a bee passage, both to retain heat and to guard against robbers. Enameled cloth should also be placed over the frames, as it will help to retain heat and thereby assist in building up the weak colony.—Geo. Spitler, in Ohio Farmer.

power. The efficiencies increase with the size and power. If it shall transpire upon repeated test and with continuous use that this type of motor can attain and maintain such duties as these without betraying serious disadvantages it will make a serious rival for the piston engine, than which it is much lighter for the same power, small, compact and extremely simple.

Horse Power of a Cannon.

A recent issue of La Nature contains a short note in which the horse power of a cannon is calculated. An Italian cannon of 100 tons, with a charge of 550 pouds of powder and a shot weighing about 2,000 pounds, will give an initial velocity of 1,000 yards per second; the length of time during which the power acts is less than one-hundredth of a second, from which it follows that the horse power developed is about 17,000,000.

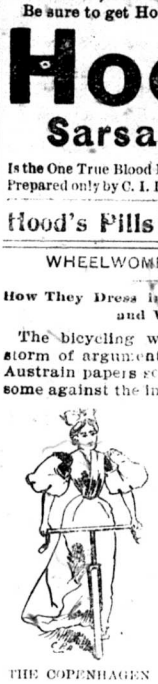
WHEELWOMEN OF EUROPE.

How They Dress in Copenhagen, Paris and Vienna.

The bicycling woman is raising a storm of argument in the German and Austrain papers some speaking for and some against the innovation. One paper, the Vienna Mode, brings an illustrated article showing types of wheelwomen in different cities. It says that in many parts of Germany and Austria a bicycling woman is still considered out of place, for the conservative German element has not ceased to believe that the bicycle is immodest and undignified for a lady to use. Opinions differ, however, and the women who have as pioneers introduced the wheels in these countries, have first set the fashion, secondly created a necessity, and thirdly, established it as a lasting custom.



THE COPENHAGEN GIRL.

The introduction of the bicycle was as difficult as was the introduction of the umbrella in the eighteenth century. This simple invention was only introduced generally after women had learned to use it and not until the inventor had for a long time been dead. During his life time this deserving man had been subjected to the ridicule, the mockery, the attacks and the insults of the conservative instinct of the masses in London. Even the name of this benefactor to humanity has been lost. He is buried somewhere in an English country churchyard, and to this day children will throw mud and sand and stones at his tomb when passing by. If they are asked why they do it, they do not know. It is an old custom, bequeathed from generation to generation, which represents nothing but an atavistic campaign of defence of the conservative spirit of the populace.

CEREMONIES OF CARDS.

Cards of condolence are sent a week after a death occurs. One card is left for a family—no more.

Cards of congratulation should be left in person, and if the family are at home the visitor should go in and express her good wishes.

Cards of courtesy should be sent with all gifts, such as books, fruit and flowers, or any trifling remembrances sent by friends to friends.

Cards of ceremony are generally used when an invitation to a wedding is given, or after an acceptance to a dinner—in any case where the card is required to do duty for formal entertainments.

Cards should be sent after a change in residence or an absence abroad.

Cards should not be used when a regret is necessary. A note is the good form.

At an afternoon tea or reception every one should leave her card with the servant on entering. If unable to attend, she should write a note the next morning, giving the reason.

The "at home" card is sometimes used for reception, with an additional name or names of the ladies to which the reception is given. Very often a separate card of a lady assisting will be sent; either is correct.

To write "regrets" or "accepts" on a card is very bad form. A note is the proper way in declining or accepting invitations.

When an engagement is announced leave a card.

After a marriage takes place leave a card.

On the return of a friend from a long journey leave a card.

After a death in a family leave a card.

Strangers in town should send their cards with their addresses to friends, and a call should be made on them as soon as possible.

In cases of P. P. C. the card is generally sent by mail on the day of the departure.

When a card is left for a stranger who is stopping at a hotel "For Mrs. ——" should be written on the top of the card.

The correspondence card is no longer used except as a business message.

To ask for a sick friend leave a card with the words "To inquire" written across the top. Expect no reply.

Cards of condolence need not be answered. Cards of courtesy or congratulation should be replied to promptly.

Announcement of births should be a small card, with the child's name in full, tied with a bow of white ribbon, at the left-hand corner. With it should accompany the parents' card, and mailed in double envelopes of medium size. A card of congratulation should be sent to the mother in return.

Then somehow the teardrops rise to your

The patient is placed for three days in a box, the temperature of which is only one or two degrees above the freezing point—the theory being that the bacilli of the disease cannot reproduce themselves except at high temperature.

For practical purposes from twelve to thirteen miles is the range of the most powerful Armstrong guns now used. This distance has, however, been considerably exceeded by Krupp's 130-ton steel gun, which fired a shot weighing 2,600 pounds, a distance of a few yards over fifteen miles. The gun cost $195,000 and each projectile $4,750.

It is learned that Russia has induced China to make all her railroads now building in the northern part of the flowery kingdom 4 feet 11 inches wide, the width of the railroads in Russia. The advantages of this concession are apparent from the fact that in the future engines and trains of the great Siberian railway can be run over Chinese lines.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

for women is the question of dress. It is true enough that women might use their ordinary street dresses when riding a wheel, and in the most fashionable part of Copenhagen, where the bicycle has become so common as to be considered an ordinary means of locomotion, hundreds of women and girls are seen flying by in dresses differing in nothing from those of the pedestrians.

A VIENNESE BI CYCLE GIRL.

The most extreme bicycle costumes are, of course, seen in Paris. The illustration furnished of one of the fair bicyclists of Paris will satisfy the reader that the limit of similarity of dress has about been reached, for, were it not for the full upper sleeve, one could not tell from a distance whether a wheelman or a wheelwoman was approaching. Let the big sleeves go out of fashion to-day and the transformation will be complete.

This is about the keynote of the Vienna Mode, a rather conservative fashion paper which has been advocating the bifurcate skirt, and even bloomers, for wheelwomen, but always with due regard to existing styles, and avoiding all extremes. The large cut shows that contemporary's ideal of a bicycle woman's dress. Although dressed to suit all the emergencies and exigencies of the sport, the costume is not in the least immodest, and remains pleasing in any position the rider may assume. The dress is made of dark blue cheviot, the bloomers are cut very full and arranged in folds at the belt. A shirt waist of light colored surah silk with a turn-down collar is worn with this costume, and the large necktie almost covers the front and is fastened in the belt. A Spencer jacket with wide collar and full sleeves, finishes the outfit. Dark blue woolen stockings, or, if preferable, leggings of the same material as the suit, may be worn. It cannot be denied, that with the little flat, round cap, the appearance of this wheelwoman is rather captivating.

A WHEELWOMAN OF PARIS.

Clara Barton's Victory.

Those who believed that Miss Clara Barton was departing on a fool's errand when she started for Turkey with relief for the Armenians, in face of the Sultan's order that she would not be permitted to distribute it, are now called upon to witness the success of this noble woman's efforts. With indomitable pluck, she refused to take no for an answer from the Sultan, and went along calmly with her preparations, proceeded to Constantinople on her humane mission, and there made a personal plea to be allowed to administer succor to the miserable Armenians. At first she was only partially successful, but now comes the gratifying news that Tewfik Pasha, the Turkish Foreign Minister, has given his assent to the demand that all relief afforded to the Armenians by the agents of the American Red Cross Society shall be distributed unconditionally, except that one member of the Turkish relief commission shall be present. Accordingly, the work of relief under these conditions will go promptly forward, and the world will have additional reason to be grateful to Miss Barton for her untiring, unselfish and altogether noble efforts in behalf of suffering humanity.—Philadelphia North American.

For Mothers to Know.

That rapid eating is slow suicide.

That a lump of sugar saturated in vinegar is efficacious in most cases of hiccough.

That in sleeping in a cold room establish a habit of breathing through the nose, never with the mouth open.

That a severe paroxysm of coughing may often be arrested by a tablespoonful of glycerine in a wineglass of hot milk.

That to compel a child to eat anything against which its palate naturally rebels is a cruelty at the moment and is likely to produce evil effects later on.

four weeks before the event. Her mother's accompanys her own.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Fashionable Colors.

Plain colors will be favorites for walking costumes, for unceremonious occasions, but there are a number of fancy new woolens so beautiful in designs and shadings that they are sure to enjoy great favor. The thick sackcloth in blue and the natural color will be much used for tailor costumes, and as the buttons and waistcoats are extremely chic they will be considerably worn. That material is thick, although made of cotton or linen thread, and is well suited to the style of skirt and bodice we expect will be in vogue. Also to be noted among the spring materials are the mohairs and alpacas, with woven silk patterns in many shades. There is also a kind of snowflake upon a canvas ground that is always white, while the ground may be had in any color. The white flakes on a gray surface is very desirable, but inappropriate for summer.

The Newest Chines.

The newest chines are remarkably lovely. Many of them are thrown on shot taffetas and shaded grounds, as somber effects are among the latest novelties this year; some of them have stripes that shade into one another. One unusual chine effect is on a shaded ground which appears to be covered with a minute white network, and the chines are thrown on pink-shaded stripes and on carmele stripes. The best of the chine effects are printed on the warp; it is only the less expensive class in which the pattern is printed after the silk is woven, but this is so cleverly done that it exactly imitates the results obtained by the results obtained by the superior methods. Chines are also to be had in a watered pattern, and numerous are the cashmerian figures. For maidens and youthful matrons these silks are obtainable in colors and designs that recall the Watteau period.

Fashionable Economy.

Fashionable women in London are agitating a new league, which has the worthy motive of preventing extravagance in dress, and even limiting the number of dresses a woman shall buy in one year, providing, of course, she becomes a member. So many women dress beyond their means to keep pace with their more favored associates that this "anti-dress league," is proposed as a sort of mantle of charity to cover a small dress allowance with fashionable respect, and bring about an average rule for dress which shall govern the richer as well as the poorer members of society. The success of this enterprise is yet to be seen, but the amusing side of it is that the women who are the most enthusiastic workers in the cause keep very clear of it themselves.

All About Her.

Delft gowns, which are in reality tailor combinations of cadet blue and white, are being ordered largely.

Short veils, not unlike those used by the French infant of fashion, are worn by youthful brides, who consider the more voluminous fall too stately.

Some exquisite drawn work is done by machine. In fact, the very daintiest designs both in embroidery and this form of labor can be skillfully and swiftly accomplished in this manner.

Violets are worn par excellence with street and reception costumes. Occasionally mignonette is used in combinations with them, but other flowers are not seen on the best dressed women.

Died in Youth.

It is our sad duty to chronicle the death of Robert David Roblin, which sad event occurred at the residence of his uncle, Mr. A. W. Wagar, on Tuesday morning. Deceased was only 15 years of age and a remarkably bright and intelligent boy. Sometime ago he contracted a cold which developed into consumption, and despite all efforts to check its progress he succumbed to the ravages of the disease on Tuesday. His father preceded him to the grave some few years ago, and his mother is at present in Victoria, B.C., and unable to attend the funeral. His brother, James, in the employ of Haines & Lockett, and his sister, Pearl, were with him when he died. The funeral took place on Wednesday to the Napanee cemetery and was largely attended.

Ay! Ay! Sir.

CAMPAIGN COMMENTS.

"Father, who travels the road so late?"
"Hush, my child 'tis the candidate."

Get off the fence. No man should be afraid to tell how he is going to vote.

Mr. Wilson is conducting a "still-hunt" campaign.

Tuppper:—toil and toiling; Laurier:—life and liberty.

The P. P. A. of Lennox will take no action as a body in the on coming election.

The Quebec Bishops mandement is a command to all Catholics to vote for Tupper. Will Catholics resent this interference in secular affairs?

The Returning Officer for Addington informs us that a candidate to save his deposit must have one-half of the total number of votes polled for the successful candidate

Mr. R. C. Clute Q. C., will not contest East Hastings.

A statistician has figured out that the conservatives have since 1878 increased the debt of Canada at the rate of $1,000 an hour, or $16 66 a minute. Elect Tupper and he will increase it at the rate of $5,000 an hour.

Galvanized iron ballot boxes, made by Kingston Penitentiary labor, will be used in the coming elections. About 7,500 old boxes and 72,000 new ones will be required.

Mr. J. W. Bell at a meeting in Sydenham as reported by the Kingston News, accused Mr. Laurier of stealing Mr. McCarthy's motion of a six months hoist to the Remedial Bill. And still some men talk seriously of sending Mr. Bell to represent Addington in Parliament.

If J. W. Bell is a consistent opponent of Remedial Legislation he should oppose the Government on all other measures until they drop the coercion bill.

"Free trade with America will be ruinous and disastrous to the farmers of Canada," so says J. W. Bell, "and he knows, yes he do."

"Articles can be bought cheaper here than across the line" says J. W. Bell. Will this very logical (?) politician kindly inform us in view of this how access to the United States market would mean ruin to our farmers and disaster to our manufacturers.

We have it on the authority of J. W. Bell that combines do not increase prices. He further avers that there is no policy in one party holding up the extravagance of the other party because the money spent in building the C. P. R., the Intercolonial railway and the Tay Canal could not have been better spent. J. W. is no doubt highly enamoured of the Hudson Bay Railway and the Chignecto Ship railway, also.

It is rank hypocrisy to say that Laurier if elected premier would grant the church more by way of Remedial Legislation than Sir Charles Tupper. Mr. Laurier has fought the demands of the Hierarchy ever since he entered public life and the Bishops are setting the heather on fire in Quebec in their efforts to defeat him. Although a Frenchman and a Roman Catholic Mr. Laurier did not shirk the issue but rose in his place in Parliament and moved the six months hoist to the Bill while recreant Orangemen of the Hughes and McGillvary ilk wobbled and evaded the issue. Ask yourself the question why do the Hierarchy desire the defeat of Laurier?

Here is an Independent American opinion of Sir Charles Tupper: "It is not unusual for Sir Charles Tupper to leave London for Ottawa when his party is in need of help, when he comes he usually starts a new party cry as he did in the general election of 1891. The cry was then for a commercial treaty with the United States. He said a commercial treaty was pending and asked the country for a large majority to strengthen the hands of the ministers in meeting the late Mr. Blaine. The majority was forthcoming, but there was no commercial treaty, and soon after the election it became known to the world that Sir Charles Tupper had made an unwarranted use of the name of Mr. Blaine. This time his cry is closer commercial relations with the mother country and to give large subsidies to fast steamship lines. Mr. Chamberlain's speech before the Canadian club in London shows how small is the chance

L. Young, of Shannonville, got filled up with whiskey last week. While in this state a number of boys got hold of him and painted him as black as a negro, and after parading him along the streets, the boys again took him in charge and painted him a bright red. He has been scrubbing himself with turpentine and coal oil ever since, but has not divested all traces of the paint yet. He is going to make the guilty ones suffer if possible.

A. F. Chinneck has been in Toronto for four months studying optics at both Ontario Optical Institute and the Optical Institute of Canada. He holds from each advance diplomas for theoretical and applied optics, and the correction by lenses of visual defects due to errors of refraction, accommodation, and convergence. In the private course with Dr. Hamill the anatomy of the eye received special attention together with some of the troubles of the system which affect it. Having the latest appliances for testing, and being the only one in this county who has taken a full course in Optics, we solicit the public patronage, promising to give every case our careful attention and to fit only those who need assistance. Fun at Arden.

Mr. Dawson's meeting at Arden will long be remembered. While one of Mr. Dawson's friends was speaking. Mr. Bell's representative shouted "It's a lie! It's a lie! It's a lie!" and rushed at the speaker. Mr. Dawson got in front of him and tried to calm him, but it was of no use. A couple of men rushed forward, and in a moment the row became general. The ladies left the platform and got out of the hall. One of Mr. Bell's most prominent supporters divested himself out of his coat and vest, necktie and one brace, and bounded on the platform, when he waved his arms and shouted heroically. Mr. Dawson stood his ground on the platform, vainly trying to patch up a peace. Seeing it was useless, he stepped to the front and shouted, "Let's sing 'God Save the Queen,'" and the crowd on the floor sang "God Save the Queen," while the row on the platform continued. As the anthem swelled up from four-score throats the disturbance gradually ceased from the platform, and the would-be-combatants stepped down, looking thoroughly ashamed of their conduct.

The Miss La Dell Entertainment.

The Miss La Dell entertainment in the town hall, on Monday evening, proved a highly successful affair. The hall was comfortably filled and the audience thoroughly appreciative. The Rev. W. W. Peck acted as chairman and occupied this position to the satisfaction of all. Miss La Dell is a clever and versatile elocutionist, and her various numbers were well received and called forth several hearty encores. Her rendition of the Delsarte Movements were graceful and highly appreciated. Miss Lil Hall presided at the piano, and rendered an excellent instrumental solo in her usual able manner. Mr J. Fred. Tilley rendered two solos in grand style and won the plaudits of the audience on both occasions. Miss Butler, of Deserento, gave a beautiful instrumental solo, which displayed her ability as a pianist to good advantage. Miss Nell Herring rendered two solos in a pleasing manner and was forced to respond to an enthusastic encore. The concert was under the auspices of the Presbyterian church, and the committee in charge are to be congratulated on the tasty manner in which the hall was decorated. Mrs. A. Alexander entertained those taking part in the programme at her residence at the conclusion of the concert, and a most enjoyable time was spent.

A representative of one of the largest manufacturing establishments in Canada was in town this week, and he asserts that he will not support the Tupper government. "I have been a stiff red-hot Tory all my life" he said. "but I will do all in my power to defeat the Tuppers. I put the interests and welfare of the country before party." He is but one of the many who are deserting the great stretcher every day.

Mr. J. F. McAlister says that Montreal will return three Liberals on the 23rd of June, and "Joe" is an intelligent observer and knows whereof he speaks.

Well might the Conservative party say: From Sir John Macdonald and Sir John Thompson

What a fall, my countrymen.

Mr. J. W. Bell thought it incumbent upon him at Sydenham last week, as a hard and fast supporter of the Tupper government, to uphold Haggart's ditch, called out of courtesy the Tay canal. "The Tay canal" said J. W. "now saves $30,000 for Canada a year." The Tay canal is a ditch running from the Rideau canal six miles to the town of Perth, the home of Hon. John Haggart. The original cost of the canal was placed at $132,660, but up to date $475,128 has been expended on it. The total cost of maintaining the canal during last season including pay for keeper, was $3,188, and the amount of revenue derived was $119.94. In 1882 the first vote was taken for the construction of this canal, and the total revenue derived from it since its construction has only amounted to $877. According to official returns the vessels using the Tay canal consisted of two tugs, one pleasure boat, two small boats, one scow and one skiff. The annual cost of maintaining, including interest on the capital invested, was about $28,000. J. W. should rise and explain.

Good Rev. Dr. Fyfthly beamed upon the boyish faces upturned intelligently before him.

"Now," he said, pressing the ends of his fingers together, "what little boy can tell me who the Psalmist is?"

"I know," he shouted, boldly.

"Well," said the Rev. Doctor, "please inform us."

As Mr. Charles Stratton, accompanied by Miss Woodcock, was returning home on Saturday evening, his buggy collided with another rig on Dundas street, driven by a man who is unknown. The front wheel of Mr. Stratton's rig was caught by the stranger's and the axle badly twisted. The shafts were also broken and the horse becoming detached from the buggy, made for home. Miss Woodcock was thrown headlong from the buggy by the force of the collision, but beyond a slight abrasion on her left eye escaped unhurt. Tuesday morning about 1 o'clock nightwatchman Perry received a call to arrest a woman who was down by the falls threatening to drown her little child, a girl of about 7 years of age. When Mr. Perry arrived on the scene he recognized the woman as a well-known character in this district. She was loaded up to the neck with whiskey and in a very testy temper. The nightwatchman took her into custody and she was brought before His Worship the Mayor who gave her half-an-hour to leave town. She has not been seen since.

One of our prominent citizens accompanied a yachting party down the bay last week. The gentleman in question is fond of sailing but has a mortal aversion to either getting wet or drowned. After the party had got out in the bay the water became tempestuous and our friend thinking discretion the better part of valor fastened a life perserver about his portly frame. Even with this safe-guard against the elements he grew tired of the stormy weather and chartered a buggy at Bath to bring him back to Napanee.

The work of repairing the Presbyterian church is progressing finely. Services are being held in the basement in the meantime.

The Foresters attended divine service in the Presbyterian church on Sunday afternoon and listened to an excellent address by the Rev. W. W. Peck.

MR. URIAH WILSON AND THE POST OFFICE, HIS TEN YEARS SERVICES TO THE RIDING.

To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.

Sir,—Having learned that Mr. Uriah Wilson has the assurance to say that it was through his efforts the Government was induced to give us our new Post Office, I beg your permission to give as brief a history as possible of his dishonorable conduct in connection therewith, that the many readers of the NAPANEE EXPRESS may judge for themselves how much he had to do with it, and how valuable (?) has been his services to the riding during the ten years he has sat in the House of Commons.

The first year that I entered Parliament I applied for a grant for a Post Office here and was unsuccessful. The second year I applied again and met, after much perseverance, with better success; a grant of $4,000 was made to secure a suitable lot, and I was informed that sufficient funds would be granted at the next session to erect a Post Office and Custom House equal to that in Belleville. Parliament was dissolved, but the grant promised me was carried out, and the building is a credit to the town and a great comfort to those who frequent there, as well as to our popular Postmaster and his assistants. Before I had succeeded in getting the promise of a grant from the Government, Mr. Uriah Wilson, the then Mayor of the town, visited Ottawa, and when I met him my first enquiry was his mission there; he replied that it was rumored in Napanee that I was likely to succeed in getting a grant for a P.O., and it at once struck me that he had an "axe to grind" as he could at any time have obtained from me the information he was seeking.

I told him there was no chance that session of getting a grant, but he expressed a desire to see the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General to satisfy himself, and to please him I called on these gentlemen and got them to make an appointment to meet us (Wilson and I) next day, which they did, and according to appointment we met them and after stating our case we were told, as I had previously been told, that there was no chance for a grant that session as there were too many applications ahead of us, and the revenue from the P.O. at Napanee would not warrant the expenditure, and I am told such was the report made by Wilson to his friends here on his return home.

Now, sir, please contrast his report of our interview with above cabinet ministers with the infamous lying paragraph published in the Napanee Standard, which I now send you together with my letter in reply.

After the grant was secured I called on the Minister of Public Works and asked him to kindly send a man to Napanee to look at the lot I had selected, he replied that I would have to call at the office of the Government Architect, whose business it was to send a competent man to select a suitable location. I did so, and left that night for home with a promise from the architect that he would send a gentleman here the next day, which he did, to meet me.

That gentleman and I took a walk over the town, and after looking at many locations he approved of my choice and the Government bought the property. This completely upset Wilson, his trip to Ottawa re the P.O. was at once explained, the "cat was out of the bag," he had resolved in his own mind that if the Government

A GOOD MEETING

A rousing meeting in the interest of E. B. Switzer was held in the Opera Hall on Tuesday afternoon. There was a large number in attendance and the meeting was enthusiastic throughout. Mr. M. C. Bogart acted as chairman in an able manner, and after a few introductory remarks invited Mr. Wilson and Mr. Stevens or anyone in their behalf to the platform. No response was made to the invitation. Mr. D. W. Allison was the first speaker called upon. Mr. Allison on rising was greeted with applause. He had not come prepared to make a speech and would not detain them long. The present election was the most unique since confederation as formerly we only had two parties while at present we have four distinct parties. Notwithstanding this, however there must be two great predominating parties. He said he would not discuss the merits of the various parties before the public but would confine himself to the two old parties. In an able speech he showed how the Reformers had secured responsible Government and the secularization of the clergy reserves. He dwelt on the ill effects of the N. P. and showed that present Government was unfit to manage the affairs of the country. One section of the Government said the other section didn't know anything and the other half called the other section a "nest of traitors." They were condemned out of their own mouth. Some one asserted that protection had made the United States rich. In the States we find that 74 per cent of the wealth is divided among 9 per cent of the population. In concluding his address Mr. Allison said he was going to vote for a farmer.

Mr. T. O. Currie made an excellent address and was listened to with close attention. He dwelt at considerable length on Grand Secretary Welch's betrayal of the confidence reposed in him and effectually disposed of the alleged conspiracy between the Grits, Patrons and McCarthyites to oust the Government. Welsh had been the trusted Secretary of the Patrons for five years and at the end of that time he could not reveal anything against the order that could not be refuted upon the public platform. The speech which Welch had made was a type-written one carefully prepared months before and was delivered at Scarboro before five men, a Free Press reporter and 12 boys. Previous to making the address Welch had spent the week with Dr. Montague and John Haggart. He didn't know how much Welch had received from Montague and Haggart, but whatever price they had paid too dear. The speaker dwelt on the iniquitous gerrymander act, supperanuations and the senate. Dr. Montague and John Haggart and other cabinet ministers went around the country in 1894 saying they could see no evidence of hard times. In 1894 there was eleven million dollars in chattel mortgages granted in the Province of Ontario alone. It now takes more than all the beef, pork, cheese and butter that we exported to Great Britain to pay the interest on our debts, and he challenged any man to disprove this statement. He then showed that the farmer received no protection. Take a three-year-old bullock, the finished product of the farmer, and there was no protection on it. Take the hide of that bullock and there was no protection on it. $1,700,000 worth of hides were shipped into Canada from the United States last year and there was not one cent of duty levied upon them. So soon as those hides were manufactured into leather a duty of from 15 to 25 per cent was put upon them. The shoemaker and the harness maker had to pay an increased price for the leather so a duty of 20 per cent was granted to them upon their harness and shoes. Not one cent of this duty went into the coffers of the country. The speaker then took up the 6 cents per gallon duty on coal oil and handled the subject in an able manner.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. Godfrey, Mr. VandeBogart, on behalf of Mr. Switzer, and Rev. F. B. Stratton, who, speaking on behalf, as he said, of the "Independent electors," strongly advised Independents and Patrons to unite forces by one of them resigning.

A meeting was announced for Mr. Wilson for Friday night, but was postponed.

ever built a P.O. in Napanee it should be erected on his lot in West Ward, on the corner of Robert and Dundas streets, and so annoyed was he that I had selected Mr. W. G. Wilson's lot that he asked who I had ever heard say that that was the proper place for the P.O. I replied that the last person that I remembered having had any conversation with in reference to it was his friend Holmes. Mr. W. replied that he did not believe Holmes approved of that location as he (Holmes) HAD PROMISED TO ADVOCATE THE SALE OF HIS LOT. So you see every thing was cut and dried by him to get a big figure for an almost worthless lot, no matter how much inconvenience the public might suffer by such an out of the way location; and to convince me of his wonderful influence with the Government, he said he would have the P.O. erected there in spite of me. He made a desperate effort but failed. Had he been your representative at the time he would have got the building just where he wanted it.

Now, sir, a word or two more with Mr. Uriah Wilson and I have done with him for the present.

Very early the morning following my handing in the letter to the Standard in reply to the editor's villainous allusion to the P.O. grant, I had a call from Mr. T. S. Henry, and on meeting him my first enquiry was as to what brought him there so early. He replied that he had been asked by Wilson to come and ask me to withdraw the letter I had sent to the Standard, as he did not want it published. I inquired why not, and asked Mr. Henry if he had said that anything I had written was untrue. No, said he, but he don't want it published. At Mr. Henry's request I called to see Wilson shortly afterwards, and he begged of me not to publish the letter, said if I did he would quit politics. I asked what was his objection to its publication, was there anything untrue in it. No, said he, but you know the truth should not be told at all times. I then left him and walked over to the "Standard" office to interview Mr. Baker, the then publisher of that newspaper, who stated that he did not know there was such a lying article in the Standard, that Elliott wrote it and set up the type and was responsible for the whole thing, and that he much regretted its publication. I then requested him to return the manuscript and I would forego its publication, which I have since much regretted.

Did the lying scribe of the Napanee Standard write the paragraph alluded to merely to gratify himself, or did he write it FOR PEOPIT TO PLEASE WILSON? My own opinion is, the latter is the true version, as he was the only person who could hope to be benefitted by it, and certainly he never thought proper to apologize for it.

During the two sessions I was in Parliament I secured for the people of Napanee the erection of our Post Office. I assisted the people of Amherst Island in securing the laying of that important connection between the main land and the Island—the telephone cable. I obtained for the people of Odessa a mail line, two trips a day, between that village and the G.T.R. station at Ernestown, which they had been for years trying to secure but could not. I got a Post Office established in the township of Ernestown called "Thorpe," and another in South Fredericksburgh called "Hayburn," and in addition to the above I got several young men situations in the public service, and last but not least I got the consent of the Minister of Customs to permit our popular Customs officer, Mr. G. M. Elliott, to remove his office from the old Benson House to the Grange block on John street, where he removed until the completion of the post office building.

Mr. Wilson has represented this riding ten years, has drawn ten thousand dollars for his services, and all that he has accomplished for the riding, so far as I can learn, was to get for one of his sons a snug situation as mail conductor, and yet this is the Mr. Uriah Wilson who is once more asking the electors to return him to Parliament. Will he get there?

Your obedient servant,

W. M. PRUYN.

THE LETTER REFERRED TO.

Editor Napanee Standard,

SIR,—In the last number of the Standard is a short article, and a most ungenerous one, under the above caption.

It says:—"It is with much pleasure that we congratulate our town upon the success which has attended the efforts of the Mayor and other civil authorities, assisted by our member, to secure the erection of a suitable Post Office building in our midst." The news contained in the above paragraph must, I am sure, have surprised His Worship and the "other civil authorities," when they read it, as much as it did me. How much truth there is in it may be gathered from the fact that weeks before the Mayor and other civil authorities visited Ottawa, I had called upon both the Postmaster General and the Minister of Customs and pressed the claim of Napanee as strongly as I could for a new Post Office and Customs building, and I had the assurance of both those Ministers that they would assist me to carry out my wishes. I then addressed a letter on the same subject to the Minister of Public Works who also promised to aid me as far as he could consistently, and after the appropriation was made the Government architect at his request kindly sent a gentleman here to examine and report upon the eligibility of the Wilson lot on the corner of Bridge and John Streets; and I am only stating what the public know to be true when I say that the rumor having gone abroad that there was a prospect of the Government making an appropriation to buy a lot, the Mayor posted off to Ottawa to satisfy himself as to what credence was to be given to it, as at that time he had made up his mind the Post Office should be erected on his lot in West ward It is scarcely necessary to say that on his return home he reported there was no chance of getting an appropriation, and yet the readers of The Standard are congratulated upon the success which attended the efforts of the Mayor and other civil authorities. No one, Sir, knows better than yourself through whose exertion the appropriation was secured as it is but three weeks since I told you in front of my own residence that I had great hopes of getting a sum placed in the supplementary estimates and you asked me, if successful, to give you early intimation that you might announce it in The Standard.

It is a matter of small importance to me to whom credit is given, but since you have thought proper to refer to it in The Standard you might at least have been honest enough—as the Beaver and Express were—to give credit to whom credit is due, and it would in no wise detracted from the well known popularity of the Mayor. The motive, however, that inspired the paragraph is not difficult to discern.

Your obedient servant,

M. W. PRUYN.

Napanee, 7th June 1886.

STANDARD, JUNE 4TH,

A GRANT FOR THE POST-OFFICE.

It is with much pleasure that we congratulate our town upon the success which has attended the efforts of the Mayor and other civil authorities, assisted by our member, to secure the erection of a suitable post office building in our midst. It was not anticipated that a grant of any kind would be obtained this session, there being so many applicants in advance of us, we were therefore agreeably surprised to see among the supplementary estimates passed during and handled the subject in an able manner. He referred briefly to the Manitoba School Question and wound up by appealing to them to elect Mr. Switzer on the 23rd of June.

Mr. Switzer was called upon, but as he was suffering with a bad cold he did not attempt to make a speech.

The Rev. G. S. White also spoke briefly.

Mr. Robt. Speers, of Collinsby, an unlettered plowboy, made a rousing speech, which was well received.

Votes of thanks were tendered to Mr. Currie and the chairman after which the meeting disbanded.

Good News for the Ladies of Canada.

Less Deception Than Formerly.

The ladies will be pleased to learn that the efforts made with the view of protecting them against fraud perpetrated by some merchants and dealers, have been successful beyond anticipation.

The substituting of worthless and adulterated package dyes for the reliable Diamond Dyes is now stopped in many places, and merchants are finding out it does not pay to sell a customer what is not asked for.

In the past, ladies have suffered much trouble, inconvenience, loss of material and money, by having poorly prepared dyestuffs foisted on them when they asked for the Diamond Dyes. In order to insure continued safety and success in dyeing work at home, ladies should examine each package of dyes offered them, so that they may take nothing home but the genuine Diamond Dyes.

For I tell you on the old homestead
Are things more grand to see,
And a Farmer, yes, a Farmer
Is a man from sea to sea.

That is where a nation springs from
And the life that elders fills,
That is where the labor comes from
To its Factories and Mills.
The Farm is the foundation
Of our glorious county,
And a Farmer, yes, a Farmer
Is a man from sea to sea.

But alas the vile oppressions
That our country feels to day
Ridden down by hard taxation
Just to make the boodlers prey.
A Farmer had no hand
In the wrongs by which its cursed,
For the Farmer, yes, the Former
Is the man that's ridden worst.

Never, although to some degree
Our country yet may rise
By shaking off the boodlers
That seek her for a prize
Never can our fair Canada
Have perfect liberty
Till a Farmer, yes, a Farmer
Rules the land from sea to sea.

The Farmer is an honest man
He never seeks for power
He watches, calmly looking on,
The questions of the hour
But when roused to his duty
Whatever it may be
He will do it, for a Farmer
Is a man, from sea to sea.

And on the 23rd of June
The Farmers out will stand
Saying, "we vote no more for party
For the right must rule the land,
And on that all important day
We'll give the rogues the rout
For the Farmers, yes, the Farmers,
Will drive the traitors out.

SALEM.

On Friday evening last while Charles Wagar and son Isdell were attending the political meeting in the Town Hall some tough from Napanee Mills stole his horse and buggy and started for his boarding house, but being under the influence of liquor somehow he got on the wrong road and as he was returning to town Everton another son of Mr. Wagar met him and a struggle followed but the thief however succeeded in getting away with the rig and headed for Odessa at a mad pace and thus escaped being captured. Mr. Wagar telegraphed to Kingston and Odessa for the authorities to lookout for him, Meanwhile Constable McCabe and Mr. Wagar drove to Napanee Mills to see if he had landed at his boarding house but no tidings could be procured of either man or horse. On Saturday afternoon word was received from Odessa saying we have what we suppose to be your horse but no man. Johnston Wagar another son accompanied by Constable Sills drove to Odessa to claim the stolen property and on arrival there found it to be in Westbrooke five miles beyond Odessa. While there they went to Kingston and gave more fully a description of the thief to the police who are all on the watch. They then returned to Odessa and brought the horse and buggy home none the worse for its outing. No trace has been received of the thief as yet.

The Little Ones at Home.

Are They Frail, Restless and Nervous?

Paine's Celery Compound Will Make Them Bright and Happy as Larks.

As a rule, parents are to blame if their children are puny, weak, nervous and irritable. The little ones may be well clothed and amply fed, and yet sadly neglected.

It should be remembered that the children inherit many of the troubles that parents suffer from. Thousands of little ones suffer from weakened nerves—a legacy from father or mother. This nervous condition begets irritableness, bad temper, headache, indigestion, stomach troubles and impure blood.

If your dear ones are afflicted with any of the troubles mentioned above, how can you expect them to be bright, happy and healthy? They need your best and most intelligent care, or they will grow up in disease and utter wretchedness.

Give the children Paine's Celery Compound; it is the medicine that is particularly adapted for fortifying the nervous system, for building flesh, bone and muscle, and for producing pure clean blood. Paine's Celery Compound is pleasant to take, it is entirely vegetable, and cannot harm the most delicate organism. It will banish every trace of sickness and disease in a very short time; it will give natural appetite, sweet sleep, and will make the little ones as happy as larks.

A mighty chorus of gratitude has gone up all over the Dominion from glad fathers and mothers who have had their dear ones perfectly restored to health by Paine's Celery Compound.

Mrs. Powell, of Palace Street, Montreal, writes:

"I have used Paine's Celery Compound with most gratifying results at different times when I found myself run-down to a nervous condition. I have also found the Compound to be an excellent preparation for my children."

"In the early part of the past summer my children seemed to be frail, nervous and restless, and had no appetite for their meals. Fully convinced from personal experience, of the great value of Paine's Celery Compound, I resolved to have my little ones use it. The results are so pleasing and satisfactory, that I am prompted to advise you, for the benefit of parents who are anxious regarding the condition of their dear ones who are frail or nervous."

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Cactoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

WILSON has been ten years in Parliament. What did he ever secure for Lennox?

ELECT Switzer and he will pay his own railway fare. Wilson travels on a pass and draws mileage from the country.

WHEN a prominent outside party worker arrives in town and registers under an assumed name it is high time for honest men to be on their guard.

LAST year it took all the cheese manufactured in Canada to pay the interest on our national debt. Return Tupper to power and it will soon take all the beef as well.

MR. Wilson shirked the vote on McMullen's motion to abolish superannuations. He says he is opposed to the system, but he has been ten years in Parliament and never once raised his voice against it.

AT Mr. Wilson's meeting in the town hall on Friday evening last, the name of Tupper, the great I, Saviour and Protector of His Country, was not even mentioned by any one of the speakers. His is not the name with which to conquer in Lennox.

WE in Canada have often boasted that a man's religion is no bar to his advancement in public life. Consequently we were grieved to hear one of the speakers at Mr. Wilson's meeting on Friday evening disparagingly refer to Laurier as a French Roman Catholic.

IN Lennox the Beaver says the Liberals will grant a much larger pro-

LAST Friday's meeting in the town hall should be a sufficient barometer to Mr. Wilson of his waning popularity and the distrust and aversion the people have of anything that savors of Tupper. While it is true the hall was comfortably filled, the contrast in the reception accorded Mr. St. John and the other important speakers is very marked. The people who were turned away from D'Alton McCarthy's meeting in the opera house would have filled the town hall to overflowing. When Mr. J. Lockie Wilson addressed a meeting here in the interest of Mr. Switzer the town hall was totally inadequate to accommodate the crowd. J. M. Godfrey drew out a larger audience than greeted Messrs. Wilson and St. John. How changed the times, my countrymen.

AT Mr. Switzer's meeting in South Fredericksburgh town hall on Monday evening, Mr. Sam McNeil ascended the rostrum on behalf of Mr. Wilson and held forth to the great amusement of the Switzer men and the disgust and chagrin of the Wilsonites. He held in his hand a book that bore a striking resemblance to a last year's almanac, and with this as his body guard hurled defiance at the Auditor General's Report and Blue Books in general. "Sam" was free to confess that his knowledge of Blue Books was a trifle hazy, "as he didn't take much stock in them, anyway." He took strong objections to the "Trade and Navigation Returns" compiled from official returns and printed by order of Parliament. He believed it was got out by the Grit Party and unworthy of confidence. He urged them to attend Mr. Wilson's meeting on Wednesday as the "true book would be there." Well might Mr. Wilson and the Controller of Customs exclaim: "Save us from our friends." It was the general and freely expressed opinion of the meeting that the Wilson party must be in a pretty bad boat, judging from McNeil's championship of the party. At the conclusion of the meeting three strong Conservatives signified their intention of voting against Mr. Wilson.

This week the newspapers and advocates of both Mr. Wilson and Mr. Stevens will endeavor to injure Mr. Switzer by misrepresenting his position. He will be held up to public execration, as a man who changes his policy to suit the locality he is in, and no doubt a few of the many canards that have been so long circulated privately by Mr. Switzer's opponents will for the first time see the light of day. Mr. Switzer's manly and consistent stand has greatly chagrined his opponents and they have been at their wits end to bring forth something that might be used to his disadvantage. Failing to unearth anything detrimental to Mr. Switzer the agents of both Messrs Stevens and Wilson have for the past few weeks been going up and down the sidelines industriously circulating that Mr. Switzer had resigned. The nomination proceedings having put an end to the efficiency of the above story a new one has been substituted, and Mr. Switzer is now represented as a man with no less than seven different policies. What Mr. Switzer's opponents expect to gain by such misrepresentation is hard to perceive. He has fought a manly, honest battle, advocating the same policy every day in the week and in every township in the riding. He has presented arguments, facts and figures in support of the principles he advocates and his opponents have met these with slander and misrepresentation. Look out for roorbacks, impersonators and boodlers and leave no stone unturned to place Edmund Burke Switzer at the head of the poll on June 23rd.

THE SITUATION.

Racked with Rheumatism

Unable to Walk, owing to excruciating pain.

After ten years' terrible torture, Cured by Scott's Sarsaparilla.

A. H. Christiansen, writing from the Clifton House, Niagara Falls, says: "I owe you more than I can ever pay. For ten years I suffered the tortures of the damned with rheumatism. Father had it before me, and I believe it is an hereditary disease. My knee joints would get inflamed and if I was out in any "weather" I was sure to be laid up, which to a travelling man is a calamity. In a score of Canadian towns local doctors treated me, some giving relief, others none. I read that Sarsaparilla was a rheumatic cure, and I asked a druggist for "a bottle of the best Sarsaparilla on the market." He gave me Scott's, remarking that it was an improvement on all others, and that he could honestly recommend it. I have taken four bottles, and am as free from pain as a man can hope to be. I was out in a rainstorm two days ago and never felt a twinge. As I said before, to Scott's Sarsaparilla I owe more than I can ever repay."

The best remedy for rheumatism, sciatica, and neuralgic pains—all arising from the presence of poison in the blood—is Scott's Sarsaparilla, a modern concentrated medicine, prompt in its curative effects. Doses from one half to one teaspoonful. At $1 per bottle of your druggist.

000,000. While the trend of everything the farmers have had to sell has been downward, the mortgages have kept growing, and to day we have to pay about $20,000,000 annually in depreciated products, as interest on our loans. The country has been virtually living in the present at the expense of the future and no heed has been paid to the reckoning day that is sure to follow. When the Minister of Finance found that the revenue of the country was inadequate to meet the expenditure, instead of shortening sail, he hied himself over to England and borrowed more money. Millions of dollars have been wasted in sink holes like the Tay Canal, while the country was feeling acutely the pinch of hard times. When we think how money has been passed out of the treasury chest to dishonest contractors and political wire pullers to be returned through this channel to the credit of the Government's election fund it is not to be wondered that the public debt increased from $140,000,000 in 1878 to $250,000,000 in 1895. The N. P. has fostered combines and monopolies, but by no means has it been a boom to legitimate manufacturers. It has injured agriculture, our chief industry, and while we have spent millions in inducing immigrants to land on these shores, the country during the last ten years has not retained its natural increase in population. The present Government retains a hostile tariff against the mother country that discriminates against England in favor of the United States. It bonuses steamships to provide the Australian farmers with Canadian made implements at a lower price than they can be purchased for in Canada. It provides for the cheap importation of Australian mutton, hides and butter into Canada. It favors a supperanuation system that costs the country $200,000 a year. It is a government that has passed hundreds of orders-in-council in favor of the manufacturer, and not one in favor of the farmer. It has increased the expenditure from $23,000,000 in 1878 to $37,000,000 in 1894. It has been a vacillating, corrupt and incompetent Government and the business interests of the country have suffered in consequence. It is a government that has as its chief policy the coercion of a sister province and is pledged to pass the Remedial Bill although its passage threatens to disintegrate confederation.

On the other hand the Patrons and the Liberals are opposed now have. In Kingston the News says the cotton mills will be forced to close down if the Liberals are returned to power. You pay your money and take your choice.

TORY orators dwell on the great increase in bank deposits under the N.P. as a proof of the unbounded prosperity of the country. This instead of being an evidence of prosperity indicates a lack of investment. If public confidence is restored by the introduction of a stable fiscal policy, the money instead of remaining locked up in saving banks would go towards developing the resources of the country.

THE position of the Tupper candidates who are opposed to the Remedial Bill is a unique one. If elected they will support the Government on the minor issues and oppose it on the main measure. One of two things will happen if Tupper is returned. Either the Remedial Bill will become law or Tupper will be defeated and a new election made necessary. Opponents of Remedial Legislation to be consistent should oppose the Government on all other measures until they withdraw the Bill.

AT his meeting in the town hall on Friday evening last, Mr. Wilson devoted considerable time in misrepresenting Mr. Switzer. He accused him of changing his policy and referred to him as a "wobbler." We defy Mr. Wilson or any one else to point to one single instance where Mr. Switzer changed his policy. He has consistently advocated the one policy in every portion of the constituency, and by his manly straightforward course has won the esteem and respect of all. Contrast Mr. Switzer's course with the equivocating course pursued by the ex-member for Lennox, and how marked the contrast is.

IF the Tupper Government is returned to power on the 23rd of June the collection of notes and mortgages will continue more rapidly than at present particularly the mortgages and debts held against the farmers. Shrewd money dealers see to what straits the country has been reduced by the mal-administration of the present Government, and are well aware that a Tupper Government would cripple the country still more. Tupper's advent to power would be a signal to the money men to withdraw the money invested in real estate. It is estimated that mortgages will be reduced one-third in one year if the Tupper Government is returned to power, and this would mean ruin to many a struggling farmer.

THE subterfuge by which the ex-member for Lennox endeavored to explain away his position on the Remedial Bill at the town hall, on Friday evening last, proved in effectual. Mr. Wilson not only voted to give the Government Saturday for the purpose of railroading the Remedial Bill through Parliament, but helped the passage of the Bill in committee. Mr. Wilson's vote was cited by Sir Charles Tupper as an evidence that he had abandoned his opposition to the Remedial Bill. The Old War Horse boasted of the ex-member for Lennox's change of front, and Mr. Wilson by his silence agreed with him. Mr. Wilson if elected can be depended upon as a servile supporter of Tupper. Electors, take your choice.

electors of Lennox will have been called upon to exercise their Franchise. Questions of the most momentous importance, affecting the future peace and welfare of our country, are involved in this election. We have reached a period in our country's history when it behoves all honest men, having the true interests of Canada at heart, to break loose from old time party allegiance and unitedly engage in staving off the impending disaster which threatens to engulf us. Let us briefly analyse the situation in Lennox and the issues between the candidates.

Mr. Wilson, our ex-member, is out as the Tupperite candidate. It is true that in some parts of the Riding he is opposed to the Remedial Bill, but on all other questions he is a unit with the "prince of political cracksmen." Let us examine the record of Tupper and his government for Mr. Wilson has no record save as a "wobbler" on the School question and a servile supporter of the Government in everything else.

Ever since his entry into public life Tupper's record has been one long train of extravagance, boodling and corruption. His veracity has been many times called into question and he has stooped to deliberate falsification and misrepresentation whenever it best suited his purpose. Tupper's political course has been one long series of dishonest exaggeration and broken promises and in every way he has shown that he is anything but a man of honor. His egotism and overbearing manner has disgusted the better element in the Conservative party and he is distrusted and feared by the great bulk of our population. Tupper's advent to power would be nothing short of a national calamity. Every wild cat scheme involving the expenditure of large sums of money would receive his sanction and support. Boodling and extravagance would run riot and this young country would be burdened with a fresh load of debt that would enevitably land us in national bankruptcy. Tupper is a man whose moral sensibilities are blunted. He intrigued with the "nest of traitors" and plotted to bring about the downfall of Sir Mackenzie Bowell in order that he himself might secure the premiership. The desertion and decapitation of Mackenzie Bowell takes rank as one of the basest acts of political treachery in the annals of any country. Tupper's bold attempt to bully the members of the House and his laudation of himself is deserving of the disgust and contempt that it has engendered. In forming his Cabinet the "Old War Horse" has sandwiched in all the available members of his family and in this connection it is well to note that the Globe publicly asserts, and no denial on the part of the ministers is forthcoming, that the Tuppers have passed a secret order in council granting over twelve millions of dollars to 50 or 60 railway projects. There are reasons to be alarmed at the unscrupulous hands Canada's affairs have fallen into nor is it to be wondered at that honest men are casting aside their old party affiliations and uniting to hurl such men from power. Men who will secretly organize a raid on the treasury on the eve of a general election for their own aggrandizement are unfit to be entrusted with office. Tupper dynasty has fattened at the public crib long enough. It is high time they were turned down. Sir Charles Tupper was a poor man when he entered public life—he is now a millionaire. Where did he get his money?

The present Government is wedded to the National Policy which has restricted trade and unduly hampered the farmer. Under this policy our national debt has increased $100,000,000. Under it the private and public loans of the last eighteen years reached to more than the great total of $450,000,000. Under the present Government the public debt has increased $35,000,000. A FEW LAST WORDS TO FARMERS.

This is an agricultural country first of all. The farmers are in the majority. Farming is the leading industry, and ought to be the most successful and prosperous industry in Canada; but as a fact it is one of the most unsuccessful and unprofitable. You all know this by a very country never was so prosperous, every farmer—Grit, Tory or Patron—knows it is a falsehood and that Tupper is lying. The farmers of Canada are very close to bankruptcy as a class, while individually but comparatively few of them are now solvent. There can be no doubt about this no matter what the boodlers and millionaires say. Now what are the causes of this condition Government by voting for Switzer. You have stood apart for the sake of party, stand now together for your own sakes. Vote against the Government which has robbed you, oppressed you and insulted you Vote against the Government which has been piling up our debt at the rate of about a thousand dollars an hour ever since it went into office. Vote against Tupper the arch boodler who is now striving to get some twelve millions more of your money to buy up constituencies from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Vote against the Government which has brought moral disgrace and would bring financial ruin on this country. They stand convicted as a "nest of traitors" and a gang of boodlers. Vote for Switzer and a new Government. As McCarthy said at Napanee no new Government could possibly do worse than the old one has done. Turn them out along with our ex-member, who supports them. The iniquitous voting by order in council of some twelve millions of our money by a rotten and moribund Government in their last desperate struggle to keep on the Treasury benches is so outrageous — so unprecedented in English history or the history of modern nations — that it ought to turn every respectable Conservative and right minded citizen in Canada against such a Government! Let every farmer in Lennox vote against it by voting for Switzer. Had that Government not robbed the producers of this country at all by the national policy and their corrupt extravagance, the fact that they have about robbed this country of its honor and credit and of a decent status among the nations ought to be sufficient to hurl them in this contest into everlasting and infamous oblivion. Let no farmer of Canada—let no decent citizen of any class— degrade himself and sanction their iniquities by voting for one of their candidates or their quasi candidates. As already shown in a former letter the only safe and effective way to vote in this County and Addington is to vote for the candidates who are straight and unequivocally against that Government, and you will make no mistake. These men are Switzer—the Patron- Liberal—anti Government candidate of this county whom the Patrons, Liberals, and the best of the Conservatives and Independents are supporting; and Dawson- the Liberal — anti Government candidate of Addington—who is being supported by Liberals, Patrons, and numerous other good Conservatives and Independents. Vote for these men and you will make no mistake. They are both the friends of the farmers and stand for a policy which will help to extricate them from their present straits. Those of you who have not had the time or opportunity to post yourselves on public questions (having to struggle too hard "to keep soul and body together") need have no hesitation in accepting my statements as true and my advice as good and meant for your and my best interests. You know I am not a politician or wire puller. You know I have never sought at twelve o'clock noon.

All and singular that certain parcel or tract of land and premises situate, lying and being in the Township of Hinchinbrooke in the County of Frontenac in the Province of Ontario being composed of Lot Number Eight in the ninth concession of the said Township of Hinchinbrooke, containing by admeasurement one ago we relied on wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, etc. but they have gone down to non-paying prices. Then we fell back on cheese, and beef, and store cattle, and horses. These have flattened out too. Our last desperate move was towards the "porker"—which was said to have been "cursed under the law and never blessed under the gospel." True, his carcass is poor stuff to put into the human stomach, but the world still demands the carcass for that purpose and we seemed to have had no conscientious scruples against setting to, to produce the carcass as a last resort to make money. But the hog, too, has gone back on us, as we might have expected from the beginning, for you all know the hog will always go just the contrary way from what you want him to go. We are getting now at last sale $3 50 to 3.75 per cwt.—not enough to begin to pay for the labor and feed bestowed on them Here we are, practically stranded, with nothing new in sight to turn to—with the mortgages and chattel mortgages, and municipal and Dominion debts, and private debts, hanging over us like a nightmare,—worse than the nightmare—for it only comes to people in the night, but this nightmare of the farmer is ever present—night and day, Sunday and Monday. The interest on his mortgage, and chattel mortgage, (in 1894 eleven millions were added in Ontario) and private note is gathering strength EVERY HOUR, and the wherewithal nowhere in sight or in prospect to meet the obligations—threatening to overwhelm him in the end, and we all know one after another is going under in spite of his utmost struggles. This is no overdrawn picture. It is a positive and absolute fact. When Tupper (who has five millions of our money without return and has given scores of millions more of it to other corrupt boodlers like himself) goes over this country as he is now going, telling the people in the cities and towns that the ment can control, while many chief ones can be controlled. The farmers themselves, had they stood together at the polls in the past could undoubtedly have averted much of the evil now upon them. Had they stood together like men instead of standing apart like fools they would have been in a vastly different condition to day. Good governments have much greater power to create prosperity among the people; and bad governments have much greater power to produce adversity among them than many people believe. That and another were the only points on which I found myself compelled to differ from Dalton McCarthy in his able and excellent address recently in Napanee. That Governments have this power for good or ill over the people I am fully prepared to prove, but this is not the place to discuss that further than to mention two indubitable facts or cases in which the Government of Canada has robbed the people as a whole in the one case and the farmers particularly in the other. The first is the principle of protection in the National Policy wherever it is applied to the necessaries of life, in the case of sugar for instance where millions have been taken out of our pockets for the benefit, not of the Treasury but for the making of a few millionaires. The other instance, while not a case of direct adverse legislation is equally chargeable against the Ottawa Government. I refer to the English embargo on our cattle trade. This is a most serious and damaging blow to the Canadian farmer, and it has been proved beyond a doubt that the Ottawa Government is chiefly responsible for that blow, inasmuch as it violated the quarantine regulations, broke faith with England in the premises, and neglected its duty in other ways. That the National Policy with its offspring the combines has bled the farmers you will hardly find a farmer now to deny. The Ottawa Government is the parent of them all. Vote against that office—that I have no axes to grind—that I have no special personal interests to mislead you—that my interests as a producer, a worker, a citizen, are your interests. On the other hand you do know perfectly well that the candidate who comes to you in a "still hunt," and the "side-line" persuader, have their own selfish ends to serve. Why, then, should the farmers not listen to a fellow-farmer's advice, whom you know, rather than listen to the subsidised organ, or the campaign spouter who is probably paid with your own money looted from the public treasury? I feel confident and certain that you will do so and that your common-sense will stand by you this time. At any rate whether you do so or not my duty is done.

And in conclusion I would warn you to beware of the usual "roorbacks"—the campaign falsehoods which are quietly retailed at the 11th hour in this hole and that corner, when it is too late to contradict them and expose their falsity till your vote is cast. I say beware of them. The Government side of this great conflict between right and wrong—between honor and dishonor—between future prosperity and present adversity—will not bear the light of day. Its supporters know they have a bad and rotten case. This has been made perfectly evident during the progress of the campaign. My proposition made weeks ago to the two Napanee papers that each paper should give the other side a column every week till after election in which each side might state its case to the other side, and by which each side would hear both sides, (the only fair and manly way)—I say that proposition was not accepted by Mr. Wilson's side, while Switzer's side accepted it. Now what does that mean? It means that the one side was afraid of free discussion—that it did not wish its readers and supporters to hear the other side of the questions in issue. It means that they are conscious of their weakness and would prefer the EX PARTE statement and the "roorback" to open discussion.

Take my advice and pay no attention to those wonderful tales and startling things that will be told you in the fence corners and back yards about the Patrons and Grits and Laurier, etc., just before the voting. Vote like sensible men for yourselves and families, instead of for politicians and heelers.

Yours, etc.,
ALLEN PRINOLE.

HAD INDIGESTION!

For a Matter of Some Forty Years or More.

Joseph Gardner, stove dealer, of Bath, Ontario, is a great believer in Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for indigestion, constipation, dyspepsia, Bright's disease, rheumatism, and kidney, liver and stomach troubles generally.

"I was troubled for over forty years with indigestion and constipation," he writes. "At intervals I suffered from severe headache. I spent dollars and dollars without result until Mr. Ball, our druggist, advised me to try Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I did so, and must say that they are the only remedy that gave me relief. I would not be without them for anything."

Many people suffer from rheumatism. Bad blood and diseased kidneys bring it on. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will remedy all this and cure rheumatism, sciatica and all kindred complaints. Here is a sample case:

"My boy was all crippled up and suffered awfully with rheumatism," writes Mrs. H. Wills, of Chesley, Ont. "He also had a touch of diabetes. The doctors could do him no good, but Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills completely cured him."

Sold by all dealers and Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. 25c.

When all other remedies fail Dr. Chase's Linseed and Turpentine will cure the worst chronic cold. 25 cents.

MEN'S WEAR.

New Changes Worthy of Note in Men's Suits This Year.

There are few changes in men's suits this year. The favorite material this summer will be Scotch cheviot in large plaids and checks. The Irish and Scotch stocking, with its wonderful coloring, will again be worn, likewise the many colored sweater. One of the '96 models has a doublebreasted coat with a square yoke and two box plaits, one on each side, both front and back. There are only two patch pockets, and these are buttoned and covered with a square flap. The knickerbockers are a trifle fuller than the old style. The adjustable support is a new thing and will doubtless prove

You note the difference in children. Some have nearly every ailment, even with the best of care. Others far more exposed pass through unharmed. Weak children will have continuous colds in winter, poor digestion in summer. They are without power to resist disease, they have no reserve strength. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, is cod-liver oil partly digested and adapted to the weaker digestions of children.

popular. This device is simply an elastic band with sliding buckle which is sewed in the "pants" on each side at the waist, enabling the wearer to enlarge or tighten the band by simply moving the buckle. It is a vast improvement on the old style V of elastic let in at each side, for this, as soon as the rubber was worn out or broken, was useless.

A comfortable and natty suit for a wheelman is of plaid Scotch cheviot. The coat is a four-button cutaway, has round corners and four pockets, over which a pointed flap buttons. A gold cap is to be worn with it. All the new coats have a deeper facing this season. In fact, they are faced from the shoulder seam to the front and then back to the side seam. This admits of the introduction of the "pump" pocket on the inside of the coat. This pocket is deep and narrow, and will just hold the ordinary-sized air pump.

There are many things for bicycle wear this season. The array is simply bewildering. Among the little "incidentals" may be mentioned the new silk union underwear for both ladies and men. It differs from the ordinary in only one respect—up the back and front is a wide strip of finer weave than the rest of the garment, and this prevents the gradual "creeping up," as the riders express it.

His Honor—The point is well taken. The witness need not answer.—Up-to-neighboring country people and the tramp pickers, who come partly from the city of Bordeaux and partly from the country side of the Dordogne. This army, the women with scissors and wooden baskets, the men with big-eared buckets, carried on a pole across the shoulders. These are the foot soldiers.

The baggage wagons are represented by big ox carts, but there is neither cavalry nor artillery. When the crop is heavy the young ladies of the chateau do not disdain to join this army themselves—so they may be called the reserve. And fine sport it is for these elegant young girls to put on short skirts of fine calico, and pretty little wooden sabots, to wear the peasant head dress of striped Madras, and to work among the vines.

All these workers march in procession to the fields; each cutter takes possession of a vine, and the work begins. The women cut the grapes into the wooden baskets, the men empty the baskets into the big buckets, and the buckets, when full, are loaded on the ox carts. Each ox cart, having received its load, is driven to the great tub; but at St. Emilion, where the old traditions are scrupulously preserved, the fruit is often carried to the tub on the men's heads. But one way or another the grapes all go to the tub, and thence to the press, while the gay vintage songs resound, and the men and girls frolic together as they work.

The first treading separates the seeds from the grapes, and when these seeds have been thrown to the chickens and turkeys, who are very fond of them, the pulp and the must are borne to the vat, which mighty tun will hold anywhere from 1500 to 2500 gallons. When this is full the trap is closed, and is all ready for fermentation. And while the first bubblings of the must go on inside the harvesters are cutting grapes for the next vat. And so it goes on.

At night the pickers sleep on straw beds, after a supper of thick soup and potatoes. This life will continue for 10 weeks, when the season will be closed by the inevitable solemn visit of the pickers to the proprietor of the chateau in the courtyard. They present him with a bouquet and a speech. He replies in feeling words, and distributes silver dollars among them.

The vintage over, the cellars are visited every day to see if fermentation has ceased in the vats. Generally this happens at the end of eight days. Three or four days longer they wait until the wine has cooled, and then the vats are tapped, and the new wine is set free for the long and careful treatment which it is to receive before it is ready for use.

First, the wine of all the vats is mixed together, so that the whole may be homogeneous; then the dregs are drawn off; the wine is drawn again and again, and left to settle, and so on. Finally comes the all-important visit of the wine broker, whose judgment can make or mar a whole crop. If his verdict be favorable, the proprietor smiles, and all is well for another year.

The Most Economical ...House Warmer

The "Kelsey" Corrugated Warm Air Generator.

Any ordinary Hot Air Furnace will produce heat if you will only supply enough fuel. The "Kelsey" has several special and valuable features but most important is that it will give more heat with less fuel and is the most durable heater made.

The "Kelsey" fire pot being constructed of several upright, tubular, corrugated, cast iron sections (see cut) around which the fire passes and up through which the cold air passes while being heated, and this entire section being wrapped with a heavy steel casing which becomes heated by the fire striking it when passing down outside of upright sections towards smoke pipe, it in turn warms the air that passes up between this steel casing and the galvanized iron casing, this explains why the "Kelsey" has three times more radiating surface and warm air capacity than an ordinary Furnace. The "Kelsey" heats every room evenly, wheresoever located, with a nice, mild, healthful warm air that will not injure your furniture.

The "Kelsey" will heat rooms 60 feet distant.

The "Kelsey" does not heat your cellar.

The "Kelsey" is absolutely gas and dust proof.

WORLD FORMATIONS.

PROF. SELWYN TALKS ON THE LAURENTIAN ROCKS.

The Distinguished Canadian Claims That They Formed Part of the Earth's Original Crust—The General Conclusions Arrived At.

President D. Selwyn, C.M.G., F.R.S., delivered an address to the Fellows of the Royal Society and their friends in the Normal School in Ottawa recently on the origin and evolution of archaean rocks, with remarks and opinions on other geological subjects. These archaean rocks are the Laurentian formations and Dr. Selwyn claims for them the position of being of the original crust of the earth, which formed at one time the cooling process. He reminded the audience that the deepest ocean and highest mountain were to the earth's diameter, just what the roughness on the skin of an apple or orange were to the whole fruit. He also remarked that there was more truth than poetry in the generally unbelieved statement that stones grow. On several points Dr. Selwyn differed with geologists who were guided by theory or governed by authority. He said geology as well as theology was often hampered by these. With a diameter of the earth, Dr. Selwyn explained how very little was known of the interior of this globe. He had also a map of the Province of Victoria, Australia, where fifty years ago he surveyed the granite formations and drew certain conclusions there from which subsequent observation had not caused him to alter.

In speaking of the ages which must have passed during the earth's history, he noted that eminent geologists differ from 28,000,000 to 350,000,000 of years, all of which went to show a very convincing proof of our ignorance concerning this great subject. They might as well speculate as to the age of the universe. The conclusions he arrived at were:

1.—No ocean or hydrosphere in early or Lower Archaean ages; consequently no life.

2.—First evidence of oceanic of aqueous and eruptive volcania action in Upper Archaean of Huronian formations.

3.—Stratiform structure is not in itself evidence of aqueous deposition.

4.—Original igneo crystalline and non-aqueo-sedimentary character of all Lower Archaean rocks.

5.—Granite, like its congener, lava or trap, was formed at many geological periods by forces operating at limited depths within the lithosphere giving rise to gaseous and thermochemical solutions, fusion and crystallization.

6.—Granite is rarely, if ever, intrusive and never unless of Archaean age, eruptive.

7.—Neither the formation of granite nor volcanic eruptions are the result of, or are influenced by central heat.

8.—Land and water, or oceans and continents, have repeatedly changed places in the millions of years during which this triune sphere had been developing itself, always in a progressive never in a retrogressive manner, as is implied by the recurrence to central heat from which we started.

Death of Niagara.

Writing of "Niagara as a Timepiece," in Appletons' Popular Science Monthly, Prof. J. W. Spencer says:

Fifteen hundred years ago the terrestrial movements raised the Johnson barrier to the Erie basin so high that the waters of the lake reached not merely the level of Lake Michigan, but the point of turning all the water of the upper lakes into the Mississippi drainage by way of Chicago. But the falls were then cutting through the ridge, and when this was accomplished, before the change of drainage was completed, the surface of Lake Erie was suddenly lowered by many feet, and thus the falls were re-established for some time longer.

Slowly, year by year, one sees the cataract wearing back and suggesting the time when the river will be turned into a series of rapids; but another silent cause is at work and one not easily seen—namely, the effects of the changing of level of the earth's crust. From the computations already referred to "The world is ever as we take it, And life, dear child, is what we make it."

This was the sentiment of an old lady to her grandchild Mabel. And many a Mabel has found it to be true, and she has taken care of her health. She keeps on hand a supply of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and so is not troubled with those wasting diseases, weaknesses, "dragging-down" sensations and functional irregularities that so many women endure.

"Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to derange digestion. As peculiar in its remedial results as in its composition.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, particularly to the womb and its appendages. For feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

A Book of 1000 pages, telling how to cure these diseases by home-treatment, sent FREE on receipt of 31 cents in stamps to prepay postage and duty only. This book is profusely illustrated with wood-cuts and colored plates, also with a vast number of reproduced photographs of those cured by the use of "Favorite Prescription" and without having to go through the ordeal of consulting a doctor. Full names and addresses are given so you can correspond and learn their experiences in curing themselves. MRS. COLLINS.

MRS. JOS. G. COLLINS, (P. O. Box 187) of Alfred Centre, Allegany Co., N. Y., writes: "I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for three months and it helped me more than all the other medicines that I had taken. Had been sick for four months with uterine troubles—can now be around on my feet without any trouble whatever; before taking 'Favorite Prescription' I could hardly get around at all. I hope this statement will benefit others."

CYCLEDOM

FINEST IN THE WORLD.

The New Cycle Club House of the Kensington Wheel Club.

What the English papers call the "finest cycling club house in the world" is that of the newly formed wheel club at South Kensington. It is called Hereford House and a few hundred workmen have just finished the transformations that have been going on about the buildings and grounds.

The wheel club can well afford a handsome house, for in its membership are forty members of Parliament, and a great many of the wealthy nobility. The house is sumptuously fitted up and furnished throughout. There are dining rooms, drawing rooms, sitting rooms, billiard rooms, smoking rooms, conservatories, ladies' sitting and dressing rooms and all the largest and best rooms open out on the beautiful grounds at the back of the house.

KENSINGTON CYCLE CLUB GROUNDS

The grounds are quite secluded and admirably suited to the purposes of a cycling organization. A well made wooden track of four laps to the mile has been built, and around all parts of it are vast amounts of room for spectators. This track is twelve feet wide, broadening to twenty feet at the bends, the banking being built up for a speed of twenty miles an hour. The track is not intended for professional racing, but is to be devoted principally to the use of the club members who want to do their speeding in private.

THE FETCHING TYPE.

THE APPEARANCE OF THE SUMMER GIRL OF THE SEASON OF 1896.

She Will Don Shirt Waist and Bell Crowned Sailor or White Swiss, Grass Linen and Fluffy Parasol, but in Either Will be Charmingly Delightful.

The summer girl has made her appearance. She came out along with the early buds and blossoms that burst forth during that midsummer week in May. It's a pity there isn't a new name for her, for the term has become almost as hackneyed as the new woman. But whatever may be said of the term, the girl herself is as fresh and blooming as ever—more so, indeed, for she has been giving more attention to physical culture and development than ever before.

It was funny to see shirt waists and straw hats when one carried an umbrella every day in preparation for the expected shower. A number of the waists worn during the hot week I have been speaking of were those left over from last summer. Among the new ones, those Persian waists seemed to be the favorites. Nearly all the new waists are made with removable white collars, hence the other waists are cheaper. It is quite correct to wear a ribbon around the neck in place of the white collar, but there is nothing to replace the cuffs, unless one ties narrow ribbons around the wristband. An inch ribbon tied in a fetching little bow at the back of the arm is rather effective, and coincides with the general tendency to make shirt waists more elaborate.

Some very dainty waists are shown made of white dotted Swiss over green silk, and trimmed with butter lace.

In regard to waists in general, I have noticed that if stripes or bands of lace insertion are used as trimming, the stripes are made to run up and down on an ordinary garment, and round and round for an elaborate evening dress.

Sleeves of thin materials are very elaborately trimmed. Zig-zag trimming on the puffs is a great favorite. An embroidered ecru net gown was furnished with sleeves that almost lost their identity in the mass of flounces and puffs that composed them. Another peculiarity about this gown was the trimming of the skirt. Flounces, accordeon pleated, were made to curve down in front and up the back, and they covered the entire length of the skirt.

It is hardly possible to make skirts of thin materials cut in the present fashion, without using some trimming. Ribbon and lace in alternate diagonal strips of eight or ten inches are set on around the bottom of the skirt. Vandyked flounces of lace are also in favor.

Many waists are made of a plain material with figured sleeves and skirts. A figured organdy has a white Swiss and lace wrist with sleeves like the skirt.

A beautiful dress worn by a beautiful woman last Sunday was made of dark blue silk with a fine, pale yellow stripe. The jacket was made coat fashion in the back with tabs that were lined with yellow. In front the whole waist was yellow chiffon. The sleeves were of silk, tight to the elbow with a little band of yellow simulating a cuff. She wore a yellow straw hat with pink rosebuds, and yellow gloves.

Gloom

Of ill health, despondency and despair, gives way to the sunshine of hope, happiness and health, upon taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, because it gives renewed life and vitality to the blood, and through that imparts nerve strength, vigor and energy to the whole body. Read this letter:

"Hood's Sarsaparilla helped me wonderfully, changed sickness to health, gloom to sunshine. No pen can describe what I suffered. I was deathly sick, had sick headaches every few days and those terrible tired, despondent feelings, with heart troubles so that I could not go up and down stairs without clasping my hand over my heart and resting. In fact, it would almost take my breath away. I suffered so I did not care to live, yet I had much to live for. There is no pleasure in life if deprived of health, for life becomes a burden. Hood's Sarsaparilla does far more than advertised. After taking one bottle, it is sufficient to recommend itself." MRS. that are working their way up from the tropics.

Some of the daintiest things that the fair shopper buys are the pale pink and blue and green dimity night dresses and petticoats, trimmed with lace. The skirts are especially pretty to wear under thin summer dresses.

The last thing, but far from the least important, that the summer girl buys is her parasol or—more properly speaking her parasols, for she has one to match every dress if possible. There is the grass linen one either plain or dotted and laid over tinted silk to wear in the mornings, or with a grass lined gown at any time of day.

Then there are the Dresden silks which can be carried with any kind of costume. Most of these have enameled handles, or what have always been called Dresden handles. These have little glass marble like knobs at the ends.

Then comes the lace and chiffon silk shades. These have very little substantial about them. They are but a piece of silk about a yard and a half inches in diameter, with net or chiffon draped from it to form the edge of the parasol. One has two or three stripes around the edge, with an open stripe between, through which a beautiful ray of sunlight might possibly slip and burn her ladyship's face.

A pretty trimming is alternate rows of lace and old rose ribbon run in and around the parasol. Indeed all the new parasols have stripes running around and not up and down on the silk, but never the whole length.

An exquisite black chiffon parasol has a bow of violet satin ribbon and a bunch of violets on the small end. There is also a bow and a bunch of flowers underneath on the handle.

All the handles have some sort of decoration either a bow or ribbon or a rosette or a tassel.

An unique design is a cherry handle with red cherries carved out of it to red beautifully and perfectly stuck. These vary in price according to the silk covering used.

Altogether the summer girl will be known by her parasol this season more than by any other accessory to her costume.

THE YOUNG MASTER

years of the life of the river only the Erie waters flowed by way of the Niagara River, and only for 8,000 years have all the waters of the upper lakes been feeding the falls. If the terrestrial movements continue as at present, and there appears no reason to doubt it for the continent was formerly vastly higher than now, then in about 5,000 years the rim of the Erie basin promises to be raised so high that all the waters of the upper lakes will flow out by way of the Chicago Canal. Thus the duration of Niagara Falls will have continued about 37,000 years. But the lakes will endure beyond the calculation of the boldest horologist.

Expensiveness of High Speed.

As an instance showing how expensive speed becomes, an instructive comparison can be made between the new British naval vessel Desperate and the Cunard Line steamer Lucania. The former is at present the fastest vessel in the world, having shown a speed of 31 knots, or about 36 miles an hour, and the Lucania being the fastest passenger steamer. The Cunarder is a 12,000-ton boat, with 32,000 horse power, while the Desperate, one-fortieth as large, requires one-fourth the power. The conclusion is, that to gain, say, one-third more speed, ten times the power must be used.

To Prevent Hydrophobia.

A correspondent writes that about six years ago he saw an item in a newspaper "stating that a German physician was going to die, and he wished to make known the discovery he had made in relation to the treatment of a mad dog bite. The prescription he never knew to fail, and he had tried it many times with men, cattle and horses. It is this: Simply wash the wound as soon as possible in a little warm vinegar and water, and put a few drops of muriatic acid into the wound. This wil neutralize the poison and prevent the disease which usually proves fatal."—Boston Journal.

The Earliest Year.

The earliest year consisted of twelve months, having each twenty nine and thirty days alternately, thus making 354 days. This being found too short, it was lengthened to 360 days, and afterward to 365.

THE CHIEF ENGINEER.

The "Empress of India's" Chief Engineer Tells an Interesting Story.

Mr. Francis Somerville, one of the best known men in the steamboat traffic on the rivers and lakes of Ontario, having been engaged in this business for fifty years, and who resides at No. 195 Upper Colborne Street, Kingston, speaks as follows of his recovery from the sickness which has affected him for some time.

Said Mr. Somerville: "The grip left me with kidney troubles and gravel. I had severe pain over the kidneys and in the small of my back, also between the shoulders and in the bladder.

"The urine was very dark-colored with a great deal of muddy sediment. I went to Mr. McLeod's drug store and bought two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. I have taken them with what people tell me is the usual good result.

"They have cleared the urine, removed the sediment, relieved me of distressing pain in the back and between the shoulders, and have built me up in a surprising manner. In fact, I am entirely free from the troubles which affected me before taking these remarkable pills, and I recommend them as a certain cure for all troubles arising from kidney disorders."

ered-in riding school at the side of the house, and another one pleasantly situated in a hollow in the grounds, with asphalted surface. The wooden bicycle track, on which the experts will disport themselves, will pass over it at each end. The space in the centre will be marked off for lawn tennis and other lawn games.

Twelve hundred persons attended the opening of the club house and grounds. The club has more than 700 members. About 250 applicants have been blackballed, and there are still about 1,000 people awaiting action on their applications. Among those elected are forty members of Parliament. The following names, which are great in England, are to be found on the rolls: The Earl of Portarlington, the Earl of Lauderdale, Viscount Hardinge, Lord Basil Blackwood, Lord Terence Blackwood, Lord Robert Cecil, Lady Jane Taylor, Lady K. Drummond, Lady Mary Shelley and Hon. Mary Henniker. The names of the committee on selection of members is kept a secret.

The wheel club has another house at Albert Gate for the convenience of members who like to ride in the parks, and still another house will be built up the river. At all of the houses bicycles of all the standard makes are kept for hire, and the service in all ways is of the best.

DOES IT MEAN WAR.

A Reduction in the Price of Bicycles Now Impending.

Close observers of the bicycle business this season have all claimed that the great rush of newcomers into the trade was bound to result in the reduction of the retail price of high-grade bicycles, says New York Sporting Life. This proposition was stoutly denied by those interested, who claimed that the demand exceeded the supply and that it would be years before the latter would equal the former. Notwithstanding these claims there were rumors on all sides of the cutting of prices by the makers of the many new wheels put on the market this season. There was considerable foundation for the rumors, and it was known that a number of the machines could be bought for less than the catalogued prices.

But one result could follow this cutting of prices by the little makers. As soon as the big manufacturers found the competition was affecting their business, it was only natural that they would meet it, and as a result, there was bound to be a slaughter of prices in bicycles. It would appear as if the time for this action had arrived. Last week a circular was sent out by a leading western firm telling its agents to meet competition. Saturday a circular was received in this city from one of the greatest manufacturers in the United States, viz., the Pope Company, stating that they had reduced the prices of one of their makes of wheels from $80 to $65. The circular states that the price of their leader will be maintained till the end of the season.

This action on the part of two such great manufacturers of bicycles is bound to be followed by other leading makers, and, while a pretense of keeping up prices for the rest of this season may be made, it does not take any great foresight to see that the retail price of high-grade bicycles next season is bound to be from 20 to 25 per cent. below present rates.

THE SUMMER GIRL.

and she was just in style of blonde that looks well in yellow. A dark silk like the one described, with light trimmings, is the safest kind of dress to buy if one cannot afford many. It is cool on hot days and never looks out of place on a cool day. It also admits of wearing a jacket with it, which is a great advantage, for nothing looks so forlorn on a cool summer day as a white or light colored dress dangling below a dark coat.

It is interesting to follow the summer girl about when she is doing her shopping for the coming campaign, says the Philadelphia Press. There is no difficulty in spotting her, for the first place to which she rushes is always the shirt waist material counter. There she buys percale for morning wear. For these she buys a plaid silk tie. She also purchased at this counter a couple of Persian dimity waists and if she can afford it she gets one made of grass linen. These admit of either white or black satin butterfly ties, or any pretty four-in-hands.

She does not buy a narrow gilt belt; she has already done that and she is sorry for it. She gets a narrow leather one. Spangled belts need not necessarily match any tint in the waist. A pale green spangled affair, that reminded one of mermaids and seaweed and the like, looked very pretty with the blue dotted grass linen with which it was worn.

Next in the route of the summer girl comes the millinery department. Here she has already bought the hat she is wearing with its nodding blossoms and fluffy tulle, but she wants a hat to wear at the beech and she comes back to her old friend, the sailor. The newest sailors have bell crowns and they are not the kind that curve gently in at the middle, but they have a sharp angle between the upper and lower sections of the crown. A very fine straw is used in hats of this kind, after the fashion of the Panama sailors

This picture shows the method of dressing the young master of the household for the summer of 1896.

Red Hair All the Rage.

The days of the bleached blonde are numbered. When rapid young women took a fancy to this particular shade of hair there was a panic in the camp of the neutral blondes, and a stampede for the hair-dressing establishments of the town followed. The color that has succeeded the blonde, however, is of just as pronounced a shade and retiring women whose hair is of this particular hue will shortly find themselves in the same predicament as were the blondes. This new color is called variously, chestnut, auburn and bronze. In reality it is red, but not too deep a red. One application of dye, carefully put on, will give the proper shade and place the girl on an up-to-date plane of beauty. The new color is not at all difficult to obtain, but as it must be gotten by dyeing instead of by bleaching, as was the case with the blonde hair, the process must be repeated at regular intervals. Any shade of hair may be dyed that color so that with care the dye lasts for several weeks. One woman wanted to know whether or not the dye would wash out if she went out in the rain, and the dresser told her that if properly applied the dye would stand the ordeal of sea bathing.

The Necktie Saver.

A bright wife writes the Chicago Herald: It takes about fifteen minutes to make a tie, and there is no need of a husband's going without plenty of neckties in order to provide for his family, and no reason why he cannot look as neat in this respect as he did before marriage.

After some little experience with the silk ties it occurred to me one day that I might save something on full dress ties. As a result, I made twelve evening bows for 25 cents, such as cost 20 or 25 cents each at the stores. One yard of Victoria lawn or India linen makes the dozen ties. With these care must be taken in putting on the cross piece to the bow, so as not to muss it with the fingers or the bow will no longer look fresh. The same strap and hooks will do for several of these bows, for when one is soiled it can be thrown away and the accessories tacked upon another bow.

A dozen (more or less) new fresh ties are a very acceptable present to the husband, and more especially if it be the work of the wife's own hands, and something to remind the husband, rich or poor, that whatever comes the wife stands ready to do her part.

The Low Collar.

It is a great mistake for fat women to suppose that a low-cut collar is becoming to them. It very rarely is. There is something almost disgusting about a double chin in bold relief, and the lines of a stout person's lower face are much better left to the imagination than plainly brought out by a collar that is turned away. This only partially applies to full dress, where the shoulders take away the gazer's eye from the face. But it does apply to the Summer Byronic collar.

A Rousing Meeting.

Finkle's hall, Newburgh, would not begin to hold the jam that crowded into the village from every direction to welcome Mr. Dawson, on the 11th. And it is conceded on all sides that it was the best political meeting ever held there, it being a common remark all over the hall "what a contrast from Mr. Bell's meeting." Mr. Bell came into the village alone and forsaken. No friends to greet him, no committee, no organization—neglected by his friends and pitied by his opponents. Torn to pieces, not by his opponents, but by a gentleman who had stumped the constituency in the Conservative interest in the last contest between the two parties—and who at their meeting did not represent Mr. Dawson. But was called on by Mr. Bell's chairman in the hope that he would help Mr. Bell, but who turned on them and literally annihilated Mr. Bell and any possible chance he had of getting even a fair support from old Conservatives who might possibly have voted for him for party sake, until that party was shown up in all their corrupt and dishonest methods by this gentleman. Contrast that meeting with the welcome Mr. Dawson received on the 11th. Enthusiastic committees had been appointed among his admirers and had arranged everything. They had nearly doubled the size of the hall (where Mr. Bell had found it too large) by taking in a billiard room, but at even double the size it was before, it would not hold the crowd of enthusiastic supporters and admirers of Mr. Dawson that clamoured for admission. Plenty of good music was provided and everything made pleasant as possible for such a large crowd. Mr. E. J. Madden was chairman and handled the meeting in his usual clever and pleasing manner. Addresses were delivered by Mr. J. B. Aylesworth, H. M. Deroche, Mr. Edward and Mr. Dawson. Mr. Aylesworth's address was a short one, plainly stating where he was as a Canadian, a farmer, and a supporter of the great Liberal party, all put in his usual happy style. Mr. Deroche followed in a more lengthy address, attacking with vigor the Tuppers, the nest of traitors, Tay Canal, superannuations, and all kindred evils that the present government is heir to at the expense of the farmer and workingman. A more vigorous or scathing indictment of corruption the audience could hardly wish for, and as the audience were the sufferers from the evils he denounced they could not help being pleased and showed it. Mr. Edwards replied for Mr. Bell, and although he agreed to take one hour he took very much more time. He was given a very patient hearing and very clearly showed his surprise that his tactics to steal the time of Mr. Dawsons meeting did not worry his opponents who gave him all the time he wanted. His arguments were of the schoolboy style that hurt none, and so they let him fire away at a few straw men that he put up to fight at, total-

A Tribute to his Worth.

Tobias Butler died very suddenly at his residence, Deseronto Road, Tuesday morning from hemorrhage of the lungs. Deceased was for over forty years in the employ of the Rathbun Co., directing the Co's lumbering operations in Hastings, Addington and Frontenac. He was a faichful member of the Catholic church and a liberal in politics. He is survived by his widow and the following family; M. J. Butler, C.E.,; E. J. Butler, Dr. Tobias Butler, Geo A. Butler, Mrs. John McKenty Napanee, and Misses Libbie and Ella Butler. He was about sixty-five years of age. The following tribute to his worth is from the pen of one who was intimately acquainted with him; "It is seldom in the annals of any man's allotted time that one is enabled to subscribe to a character such as that of the life of this one great good man whose name heads this article. The application of the term "great good man" is used advisedly and the whole surrounding county who knew him are ready to certify it is correct. Frugal, temperate and honest to a degree only possessed by a spirit in man in perfect accord with the commandments of true spirituality; with a morality second to none, a living exhortation to right, in which any deviation from right paths were to those who met and knew him a broad lesson of God intent and wishes. His integity was such that his word was sufficient with all with whom his life came in contact. In council, with his interests in business life, his advice was preeminent and sought for and his position was never disputed, because he never would nor could use his judgment adversely to the dictates of a refined conscience. It was reserved for him to assume the place allotted to the brightest and purest jewel of the Rathbun Co. business crown. In his associates he held a place in each man's heart where only good true blood can be found and there are tears dropped over his memory which will ever remain moist, and act as an ever recurring dew to better the lives of those who knew and loved him well. In the people of the county in which he lived there is no second thought as to his worth and every county or township council before whom he at any time stood to present a case for adjustment accepted his word as to facts as all sufficient. As a husband and father I shall not speak for it is reserved for his family to mourn the loss of one who in that sphere was not eclipsed by the best or greatest man that has gone before. Good-bye Toby, the writer, with the rest of your associates, are so much better for their association with you, and one feels to-day as if your hands had been placed on our heads and a benediction pronounced that will do great spiritual work for future years.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We hear a great deal these days about the increased purchasing power of a dollar. How does this apply to the farmer. The same quantity of the farmer's produce that would pay the interest on a two thousand dollar mortgage in 1878 will barely pay the interest on a one thousand dollar mortgage to-day. It takes double the quantity of the farmers cereals to provide an education for his children to-day than it did in 1878. Notwithstanding the increased purchasing power of a dollar the cost of Government has increased many millions since 1878, and the national and other debts of the country have reached the enormous total of $450,000,000. Think of it farmers that you have to pay the interest on this enormous debt in depreciated products and ask yourselves is it not high time the extravagant and corrupt Tupper Government was turned down, and its place filled by a more economical administration.

Thirty millions of dollars find their way annually into Britain as interest on our debts.

Corn for the manufacture of whiskey is admitted into Canada free but it is taxed when farmers want it for feeding purposes.

This election will be fought out on lists two years old and many thousands of young Canadians will be disfranchised in consequence. Uriah Wilson endorses the iniquitous Franchise Act.

The Trent Valley Canal runs through 19 constituencies and that is the sole reason why the Government has put thousands of dollars in this perennial sink hole.

power to cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures—absolutely, permanently cures. It is the One True Blood Purifier. Its superior merit is an established fact, and merit wins.

A quiet wedding took place at the Western Methodist parsonage on Wednesday evening when Miss Edith Huffman, eldest daughter of Mr. John Huffman, was united in wedlock to Mr. George Vanalstine, of Napanee The ceremony was performed by the Rev. D. O. Crossley. The happy couple left on a trip east where they will spend their honeymoon. Both are decidedly popular in town. The EXPRESS extends congratulations.

The funeral of the late Mrs. J. F. Smith took place from her late residence, South Napanee, on Sunday afternoon to the Napanee cemetery. The Rev. D. O. Crossley conducted the funeral service and paid a glowing tribute to the worth of the deceased. The funeral was very largely attended, testifying to the esteem in which Mrs. Smith was held by all. The Foresters, to the number of 73, and the United Workmen, to the number of 46, followed the funeral cortege in a body to the cemetery. Floral offerings and tributes of affection were numerous.

At one of Mr. Dawson's meetings held last week an agreement was arrived at between Mr. Bell and Mr. Dawson, whereby Mr. D. kindly consented to grant Bell and his speaker, Edwards, one hour between them. Mr. Edwards spoke one hour and fifteen minutes and notwithstanding the agreement entered into, Bell then claimed the right to speak. Mr. Dawson very generously allowed him twenty-five minutes in which to do so. At the termination of the twenty five minutes Mr. Bell refused to make way for Mr. Dawson, stating that if the people wished to hear him he would go on speaking despite the agreement and the rulings of an imported chairman from Tamworth. No wonder the decent element in the Conservative party have lost confidence in Bell.

Mr. Dawson should be well pleased with the progress made last week in his campaign work. His meetings at Newburgh, Camden East and Napanee Mills must have been very encouraging to him and correspondingly depressing to his opponents. It is now acknowledged by all parties that Mr. Bell has destroyed every chance he may have had by his unfair treatment of his opponents in the present campaign, and his conduct in the last few days shows that he does not even hesitate to break a promise or go back on a fair bargain. And even his best personal friends have been led to express their feelings, and say "they are ashamed of him." On the other hand Mr. Dawson's fair manly fight, his upright dealings with his opponents, and his smiling confidence has won its way into the hearts of the people who may differ for him in their way of thinking, but must give him their respect and admiration that is the just due of an honest character and a generous foe.

by the candidates. No speaking was indulged in at the hall. W. R. Lott was appointed financial agent for E. B. Switzer, A. W. Grange for Uriah Wilson, and John English for Charles Stevens.

Resolution of Condolence.

At an Official Meeting held at Sillsville, on the 9th of May, 1896. The following resolution was carried unanimously

To MRS. JOYCE AND DAUGHTER,

Inasmuch as it has pleased Almighty God to take from you your best friend, it is moved by J. B. Allison and seconded by D. Haugh, that we, the members of the Official Board of the Methodist Church of the Adolphustown Circuit, take this the first opportunity of expressing our sincere sympathy in the great and irreparable loss you have sustained in the death of a kind husband and an indulgent father. We feel that in the death of William Joyce the Township has lost an honest citizen, the Church a loyal member, the Sunday School a faithful superintendant and this Board an efficient member, but we realize that the loss of these out side of your own home is not to be compared with yours, and our prayers is that, he that has promised to be a husband to the widow, and a father to the fatherless, will be your support in these your days of sadness.

E. S. SHOREY, Supt. MARTIN HAUGH, R.S.

A Strange Disappearance.

The residents in the back part of the Township of Sheffield are in a very excited state over the mysterious disappearance of Mrs. Spratt, an old lady over eighty years of age. On Sunday morning last Mrs. Spratt left her son's residence, Mr. Matthew Spratt, who resides on the California road, eight miles back of Enterprise, to visit a neighbor. She had dinner at the neighbor's house and started to return home. She was last seen near her son's home by one of the inmates of the house, but after some time had elapsed her non-appearance was noted and a search instituted. No trace of the old lady could be discovered and a search party of fifty-men was formed and every conceivable nook and corner explored for the missing lady. Up to Tuesday night the only trace discovered of the old lady was her cane, which was found in a piece of woods a short distance from her son's place. The residents have explored every portion of the country, and on Tuesday night were still out vainly endeavoring to discover the whereabouts of the poor old lady. What seems strange is the fact that Mrs. Spratt was unable to walk without her cane, as she was very feeble and nearly blind.

ly overlooking the fact that there were real issues before the farmers to-day that they could see if he could not. Mr. Dawson then held the meeting until 12:30, the whole crowd with few exceptions stayed to hear his last word.

Principal Grant says that there is scarcely a page of our tariff from which illustrations could not be drawn to show that our tariff discourages industry, or that it is constructed not so much in the general interest as in that of some particular person or company that has managed to get the ear of the finance minister.

Farm lands in Ontario have decreased some fifteen million dollars in value since 1893, still our farmers have the consolation of knowing that by paying duties of 70, 72, 40 and 25 per cent, respectively on coal-oil, rice, cotton, clothing and sugar they are keeping up the National Policy and building up a cod fish aristocracy in this great country of ours.

The Mail & Empire claims that D. D. Rogers, of Frontenac, is a Conservative Patron. What about the conspiracy fake.

Rogers, of Frontenac, was elected by acclamation. He is the only M. P. in Ontario at present.

We also wish to place on record our appreciation of the untiring efforts of the sister in charge, on behalf of the Sisterhood and its work knowing as we do that under God, whatever success may have attended our labors in the past, is due in a great degree to the untiring zeal and energy with which she has discharged the duties of her office. ST. JOHN REVIEWED.

Professedly to lead us in the way of political salvation, but really to make the usual amount of statements too objectionable for Mr. Wilson to make himself, there appeared on the platform at the town hall on Friday evening last, a Mr. St. John from Toronto, not the St. John who saw visions on Patmos' Isle, but a St. John who sees visions and dreams on the opposition benches at Toronto, and blows them up occasionally to the unfortunate ones who are obliged to stay within earshot of his meetings. The audience he faced was one of fair size and ordinary quality, to which he at once proceeded to dish out a liberal quantity of taffy and slops. But he did not seem at home until he got fairly into abusing Sir Richard Cartwright and getting off the old blue ruin gag, which he did, greatly to the delight of the section of the audience that are always pleased to hear a practical opponent abused, particulary if the sufferer is one who was once one of themselves, but has left them in disgust. Abuse of Cartwright seems to be a safe delight for these slingers of dead cats to indulge in, as their utter insignificance always protects them from Sir Richard's wrath. For be it said to Sir Richard's everlasting honor "he answereth them not a word." The address, which was delivered with much bellowing, waving of arms and stamping of feet. was listened to with fair attention, many of the audience being almost paralized by the absorption of so great a quantity of fiction and so little fact. The speakers (so-called) facts, figures, arguments and spotted dog stories, were all "old sagers" raked from the ash heaps of former political campaigns A few pickings from St. John's rag bag will suffice to give a fair idea of the whole, and here they are:

1st "Their is no place in this country for agnostics." A strange sentiment for a christian gentleman.

2nd "A person buying goods manufactured in Canada pays no duty." A half truth which is more dangerous than a lie.

3rd "Agricultural land in Great Britain has decreased in value more than in any country." On the contrary the value of agricultural lands, schedule B in Great Britain in 1842 was £46,000,000, in 1894 their value was not less, but slightly more. Can this be said of Canadian lands.

4th "The state of Canada from 1873 to 1878 was the worst ever known in this country." This is in direct variance with what is well known and remembered by thousands who were farming and doing business at that period of our history.

5th "Great Britain was forced to adopt free trade in order to get food for her workmen." If this is true, then agriculture during the time of protection must have been a fine time, but on the contrary between the years of 1815 and 1845 (when protection was abolished,) for thirty years the trade of Great Britain does not show any increase, and during the same thirty years of protection agriculture was at its lowest ebb, and although that country has had hard years under free trade, yet the worst times under free trade have been happiness compared with abject suffering that prevailed in the agricultural districts of Great Britain during the dark years of protection.

6th "There is no difference between coercion and concession, and I defy anyone to show where there is any difference." When A and B gets into an argument and B conceeds the point, that is concession, but when A takes B by the throat and chokes him into submission, that is coercion, and yet this great oracle from Toronto can't see the difference.

7th "I compare W. Laurier to a dog with false spots on him. the last of which will be washed off on the 23rd of June, and then he will appear in his true colors." But why! Oh why! did Mr. St. John not tell us the oceans of acids and blue vitrol it would take to cleanse the hide of Sir Chas. Tupper of the gangreen blotches that cover it.

8th "The greatness of the United States was built up by blowing and teaching the boys to blow for their country from their infancy. This is what makes people loyal." Mr. St. John must have been raised in the United States, or born during some terrible gale, for he is the biggest blow that has struck Napanee for many a day. Let us hope that little damage has been done however.

9th "The best minds of Great Britain advocate Protection for that country, as we have it here, a stable protective policy." Our N.P. has never been stable, it has been ever changing and always getting worse. Protection in Great Britain would mean to us a loss of say $10 a head on cattle, $20 on horses and 5 cts per lb on cheese. How would our farmers like that?

10th "Protection and preferential trade is what we want in Canada." The sisters, protection and preferential trade, are diametrically opposed to each other. We can't have both.

And now, Mr. Editor, we might go on and enumerate a dozen more fallacies that St. John's speech contains, but surely these are enough. Yours, etc.,

T. S.

PERFECT ARMS.

Society and Stage Boast Many Who Own Beautiful Ones.

There are numerous women who are noted for their beautiful and graceful arms, which artists claim are the least common of all points of beauty. Some of them are society women and some of them are stage queens. The "divine Sarah's" arms are almost as noted as her golden voice.

Emma Eames has more classically perfect arms than even most beautiful women. There are numerous other lesser lights both on the stage and in society who boast remarkable arms.

But unless these ladies find upon careful measurement that their arms are molded in the following proportions they may not claim to be classically correct. One celebrated statue of Venus shows these proportions:

	Inches.
Length of arm from shoulder to finger tips	28 7-20
Length of arm from shoulder to elbow	12 3-5
Length of arm from elbow to finger tips	15 3-4
Around upper arm	11 3-8
Around elbow	10 1-8
Around forearm	9 3-8
Around wrist	8 7-16

Diana, who should be the model for athletic women, has beautiful arms as she is represented by sculptors. In one statue the proportions are as follows:

	Inches.
Length of arm from shoulder to finger tips	29 7-10
Length of arm from shoulder to elbow	13 1-5
Length of arm from elbow to finger tips	16 1-2
Around upper arm	16 1-2
Around forearm	9 15-16
Around wrist	5 5-16

Sights and Sounds of Past Ages.

People are now familiar with the idea of storing up sound for future use so that a man's voice can be heard long after he is dead. It has been recently suggested that somewhere in the storehouse of nature the sight of all that has taken place is stored up, and that Moses got his account of the creation from a kind of kinetoscope which was disclosed to him as he stood in the cleft of the rock and saw the picture of the procession of events pass by. As Dr. Johnson said, we have seen so much that we are prepared to believe more. When people in New York City can hear the roar of Niagara, when machinery can be driven by a water-wheel 500 miles distant, when we can see through boards and take photographs of a fat man's bones and the money in his pockets, when we can talk with our friends a thousand miles away and recognize the tones of their voices, when we can warm the baby's milk at night by touching a button, we must be obstinate, indeed, if we refuse to believe anything. There is nothing in the "Arabian Nights" as marvelous as the things that might have been seen by anyone recently in New York. And yet, if we apply the logic of David Hume in his essays on the miracles to these things, we should refuse to believe that a photograph of a living man's skeleton may be taken. Hume refused to credit the miracles because they are contrary to all human experience, and nearly all the phenomena now on exhibition at the electrical show are contrary to human experience. It is a matter of curious speculation, have we reached the limit of knowledge of electricity, or are we upon the threshold of scientific revelations? Will we in time discover that apartment of nature's storehouse where she keeps the sights and sounds of past ages?—Baltimore Sun.

TAMWORTH.

The election is over and the Conservative goverment is defeated and monopoly at an end and a revenue tariff will now be the order of the day. The polling day was all that could be looked for. It was a beautiful day and a large poll was taken, The returns are not all in yet but from what has come in Mr. Bell is elected for this riding.

Our roller mill owned by W. D. Mace, was very badly smashed last night. Mr. Mace had got in some Manitoba wheat, about 1000 qushels, which he had stored in three large bins on the second flat and the weight was too great for the building. The main beam gave way letting the wheat down to the ground floor doing a great deal of damage to the building and damaging a large lot of flour which was baged up ready for market. The mill presented a wrecked state the next morning and had to shut down for a few days until the repairs are made. Part of the wheat went down to the basement and considerable will be lost. The loss will be considerable.

A Story of an Artist.

A story is told of a now famous American artist, who was seen, one day during his struggling days in Paris, with his clothes in the last stage of dissolution, and his shoes tied up with twine. But there was a wild gleam in his eye. "I've got a hundred dollars!" he shouted to a friend across the street, quite oblivious of the crowd—"a hundred dollars, and I'm going to buy some shoestrings!"—Argonaut.

Not a Substitute.

A dignitary of the church who is a warm advocate of missions was talking with a prominent official of the War Department the other day and remarked that "a single shot, fired by one of the largest guns, cost as much as would keep a missionary for a year." "That is true," rejoined the official, "but then, you know, if it came to a war, we could not fire off missionaries."

Letters in Smoke.

American lovers of the weed who can "make rings" pride themselves on being "artistic smokers," but they are not to be compared with the Japanese juggler and their famous smoke tricks. Japanese artists in that line link rings together, make crosses and spoked wheels, and some are even said to be able to make a succession of readable letters.

The elm tree beetle has reappeared in most Connecticut cities this year, and Hartford, New Haven and other cities are preparing to spend thousands of dollars for its extermination.

In contrast with the English average price of 60 cents per 1000, the following list of prices paid for gas in representative American cities is worth looking at:

New York	$1.25	Newark	$1.40
Chicago	1.13	Minneapolis	1.60
Philadelphia	1.00	Jersey City	1.75
Brooklyn	1.25	Louisville	1.20
St. Louis	1.50	Omaha	1.75
Boston	1.08	Rochester	1.25
Baltimore	1.25	St. Paul	1.70
San Francisco	2.00	Kansic City	1.60
Cincinnati	98	Providence	1.20
Cleveland	80	Indianapolis	1.25
Buffalo	1.00	Allegheny	95
Milwaukee	1.00	Washington	1.25

There is only one American city of the largest class which owns and operates its own gas works—Philadelphia. In that city the price of gas is only $1 per 1000, and, besides furnishing the consumer with his gas at this comparatively low price, the city of Philadelphia is making an annual profit on its gas works of over $1,800,000.—New York Recorder.

Bismarck on Contentment.

Prince Bismarck, in receiving a deputation from Bremen and Bremerhaven the other day, said: "Nobody is ever quite satisfied, and it would be a misfortune if all were. All striving after something better would be at an end if everybody were content—that is clear. God has, therefore, planted discontent in us as a spur, and therefore each of you will have his wishes and be grateful to our public institutions, in so far that they give you the possibility of satisfying those wishes as far as human imperfections admit of it. But give up believing that a general state of content will ever arise in the world, either by means of social democracy or in any other way—that is impossible. We should become nothing but idle dogs like the South Sea Islanders, who lie under the palm trees and do nothing but eat dates which fall into their mouths. Content is not in the world—has not been given us by Providence. Let us see if we shall find it at table, if the gentlemen will do me the honor of lunching with me."

HARD AT WORK EVERY DAY

Paine's Celery Compound Renewed His Life.

Farmer Smye says : "I am a Living Witness."

Mr. George J. Smye, farmer, of Sheffield, Ont., writes as follows ;

"It is with great pleasure that I testify to the value of your great medicine, Paine's Celery Compound. For nearly two years I suffered from indigestion, kidney and liver troubles. After trying several medicines that did not effect a cure, I decided to try your Compound. Before using it I was so low in health that I could not eat or sleep. I could not lay in bed owing to pain in my back ; it was only by resting on elbows and knees I was enabled to obtain a slight degree of ease. Before I had fully taken one bottle of your medicine I began to improve. I have now taken in all fourteen bottles with grand results. I am a farmer and am now working every day. Anyone may refer to me in regard to these statements, or to any of my neighbors around Sheffield, where I am well known. I am a living witness to the worth of Paine's Celery Compound."

The proprietors of Paine's Celery Compound have on file thousands of such strong and convincing testimonials from the best people in Canada.

No other medicine in the world could have met the requirements of Mr. Smye, as Paine's Celery Compound did. Sufferings such as Mr. Smye endured are not conquered by the common sarsaparillas, nervines and pills that are presented to the public for all the ills of life. Mr. Smye had made a trial of the majority of these advertised remedies before he heard of Paine's Celery Compound, and they failed to cure him. The moral taught by Mr. Smye's experience, and the past testimony of thousands of other people is, that kidney and liver troubles and indigestion can only be cured effectually by Paine's Celery Compound.

The great medicine Paine's Celery Compound, is as far apart from the guesswork remedies advertised as black is from white. In the judgment of able physicians, the great medicine is the triumph of the century. They prescribe it for their parents, and carry it home to their own families.

Paine's Celery Compound is an able medical scientist's prescription ; it is a preparation that combines all the most approved ingredients that are so necessary for the making of pure and healthy blood and strong nerves. It keeps up perfect digestive action and vigor, thereby giving continued good health and strength of body.

If you are convinced that your condition of health demands the use of Paine's Celery Compound, avoid substitutes and the "something JUST AS GOOD" that many dealers recommend for the sake of profit.

A lazy, slow or torpid liver influences the whole system, causing biliousness sick headache, sallow complexion, languor and dullness. Burdock Blood Bitters regulates the liver, purifies the secretions and cures all forms of liver troubles. We say so and here is the proof:

PERSIA'S NEW SHAH.

PERSONALITY OF THE NOTABLE ORIENTAL SOON TO BE CROWNED.

Popular in the Province He Has Ruled Since Boyhood, Great Things are Predicted for Him in His Wider Sphere —A Notable Monarch.

Mozaffer-ed-Din-Shah, Persia's new ruler, is 46 years of age. Born at Teheran, he was sent in his tenth year to Tauris in charge of the Sardar Aziz Khan, who was then Governor-General of the Province of Azerbaidjan, which is an appanage of the royal princes of Persia. On attaining his majority Prince Mozaffer himself became Governor of this province, and by his many good qualities, and especially by his strong sense of justice, he soon became very popular, not only among his own subjects, but also throughout the entire country.

Mozaffer enjoys good health, and is very fond of bodily exercise. Like his father, he is a great hunter, and spends much of his time killing the tigers, panthers, leopards and bears which abound in the mountains of Tauris.

Though a true Oriental, Mozaffer has much of the western spirit of curiosity, and, though his father would never allow him to visit Europe, he has taken pains to make himself thoroughly acquainted with the leading factors of European civilization. Thus he is a good French scholar, an expert photographer, and a lover of modern music. At heart, however, he is a true namad, and likes nothing better than to spend whole days in the open country, lying in his tent or galloping after wild game. There are few better marksmen than he, as those who have seen him shoot with his Russian, Austrian and German guns can testify.

A firm believer in the faith of his fathers is Mozaffer. Some claim that he is more of a recluse than a statesman or ruler. He is certainly devout, and from the Persian point of view he leads a respectable life. He has only one wife, who is also his cousin, and there are not many women in his harem. He has had several children by his wife, but only two daughters are living. By his concubines he has three sons, who are now respectively 20, 14 and 9 years of age. By the advice of M. Bernay, who was for a long time French Consul at Tauris, and who enjoyed Mozaffer's confidence, the education of these young princes has been intrusted to a French teacher, and, as a result, they speak French very well and have acquired other European accomplishments. A French governess has also been placed in charge of Mozaffer's young daughters.

The new Shah's personal appearance is striking. He dresses, as a rule, very plainly, and wears no insignia of rank. He is well built, his features are regular, his eyes are large and more brown than black, his eyebrows are very heavy and his mouth is mobile and half concealed by a long black mustache. His face generally wears a kindly expression and always impresses one with its calmness and imperturbability.

That Mozaffer's succession will be

"Should I die while I am in a position to pay my insurance premiums, my family will owe their support to Scott's Sarsaparilla. Two years ago I applied to two companies for insurance, $1000 in each. My face was a mass of pimply blotches and my urine did not stand the test. One doctor in examining me said I could not pass, but that my trouble was curable. He advised an alterative medicine, and I commenced taking Scott's Sarsaparilla. Both companies rejected me, but four months later, after I had taken five bottles of your remedy I am thankful to say both accepted me as a risk—one being a stock company, the other a mutual. The examiner who previously examined me, remarked "I never saw such a change in any man." This is indorsed by Mr. J. Todd, the popular druggist, corner Queen and Crawford Streets, Toronto.

Scott's Sarsaparilla builds up debilitated constitutions, imparts strength, vigor and vitality, clears and purifies the blood. It cures skin diseases, rheumatism, gout, indigestion and all complaints arising from poor or poisoned blood. Of all druggists, $1 per bottle.

FARM HORSES.

Judicious Rationing Which Will Increase Their Effectiveness.

The effectiveness of working horses on farms is often impaired by injudicious feeding. Overloading the stomach with innutritious food is a common error and is mainly due to the average farmer's dependence on hay as the staple and cheapest food for horses. Really, so far as effectiveness goes, grains, and especially oats, are always cheaper than hay. Liverymen and those who keep horses soon discover this fact. Farm work differs from that on the road in not requiring so rapid motion. Farm horses can, therefore, be fed more hay, but enough grain or meal should go with it so that the proper amount of nutrition can be secured without too great distention of the digestive organs.

The farmer will find his most effective ration in ground oats, mixed with cut clover or timothy hay, and fed slightly wet so that the meal and wet hay will adhere. The best proportion is half weight each of the hay and meal This will of course make the hay more bulky. The ration for a 1,200 pound horse will usually be about 16 pounds of oatmeal per day and the same weight of cut hay, divided into three messes morning, noon and night. On such a ration as this horses will keep at work and in good condition indefinitely. The feed at night and morning should be slightly larger than at the noon meal. Three meals per day, with long intervals between them to allow the food to digest, are better than continuous eating, even when grain is given.

Timothy hay is much less nutritious than clover. It is also less liked by horses, which should be stinted in their feed of clover, so that they will not get too much. Usually clover hay should only be fed cut and wet and mixed with meal. This wetting the clover will keep the dust in it from injuring horses that are broken winded from hard driving when their stomachs are over loaded. Bran and wheat middlings abound in the nutrition for furnishing strength. But it is very rare that bran can be fed with advantage to a horse that is working hard. It will sour his stomach, and that is always weakening. But fine middlings have a contrary effect and can be mixed with ground oats, and so fed with the cut hay. A horse at work should be neither constipated nor very loose in his bowels. If the excrement is at any time hard and dry a very little linseed meal will remedy the difficulty. It cannot, however, be given in large quantities, as it is very concentrated food.

When wheat middlings are fed to horses without other grain, they should be mixed with a larger amount of cut hay so as not to become compact in the stomach. It will generally pay to take extra pains to have ground oats to mix with the cut feed, and give this disputed is by no means improbable.

True, the new Shah is very popular, and the only one of his brothers who could make any headway against him is universally hated. The eldest brother, Lelle Sultan, Governor of Ispahan, is at a great distance from the capital and is not considered a dangerous rival.

Quite different is the case with the other brother, Naib-el-Saltaneh, who is now at Teheran as Minister of War. He is in possession of the famous treasure of the Shahs, which is of incalculable value. This treasure, which is composed of many million dollars' worth of gold and silver and precious stones, is secreted in the royal palace and is guarded by sentinels day and night.

Besides this royal treasure there is a quantity of jewels, which are also hidden in a secret room in the palace. Among them are diamonds, rubies, emeralds, pearls and other precious stones, the most splendid of all being a magnificent diamond, which is known as the "sea of light."

But the chief gem of this royal treasure is a large terrestrial globe of massive gold. From the North to the South Pole this globe is studded with jewels, and the Persian letters forming the names of the capital cities are also mounted in brilliants. India is represented by splendid amethysts, Africa is composed of rubies, England is fashioned of diamonds of the finest water, and the oceans are made of emeralds.

Besides this, there is a portable marble throne, which is surrounded by a great golden sun and is copiously studded with diamonds. Beneath this sun's rays stand stately birds, whose plumage glitters with precious stones. The covering and the cushions on this throne are beautifully embroidered and fringed with large, fine pearls.

Now Naib-el-Saltaneh, being practically in possession of this treasure, it is not strange that many persons should consider him the chief stumbling block in Mozaffer's path, and that the pessimists among them should even hint that his ambition may lead to civil war.

The question is: Will Naib-el-Saltaneh hand over the royal treasure and consent to pay homage to his younger brother as the new Shah?

The answer to this question will soon be known to all the world.

oatmix with the cut feed, and give this ration steadily each day through the week. Winter Cress a Common Weed.

Since the first of May, dots of yellow bloom have been frequent in the grass lands both high and low, and along the highways and railroads. A large portion of these clusters are of winter cress, one of our weedy mustards. It is a biennial plant, and dies upon fruiting. It is quite apparent that this weed is on the increase and is much too frequent; a description of it, with illustrations, is offered with the desire to reduce the numbers of the pest.

Winter cress, Barbera vulgaris, shows its clusters of dark green leaves in the fall and winter; with spring the shoots, bearing branches with numerous flower clusters, soon grow up. The character of these parts is shown in the cut. Short, narrow pods filled with seeds follow the yellow, four-petaled, cross-shaped flowers. The seeds find their way with grain or among grass and clover seeds and may germinate soon, or under unfavorable conditions may remain a long while dormant and plague the cultivator who undertakes to clear the land of them. Only the most thorough cultivation can usually free the infested land from these mustard enemies, so that methods of extermination are the same for all.

When a weed requires a portion of each of two seasons for its maturity, the chances to destroy it are increased. In all plants which are spread or propagated exclusively by seeds, as this one is, the remedy should be applied to prevent maturity of seeds.—A. D. Selby, botanist Ohio Experiment Station, in Ohio Farmer.

Testing Seed Corn.

Test your seed corn. Count a number of grains, put them into a box of moist earth or sand, and place in the kitchen where the temperature is sufficiently high to cause germination. In a few days it will be possible to determine what per cent. of the seed is good. —American Agriculturist.

Solid Consolation.

A late settler in a thinly populated place in the west had just returned from the funeral of a near and dear relative and was silently weeping alone in her darkened parlor, when one of her new neighbors, a plump, good-natured and kind-hearted woman came trotting in.

"Now, now, this'll never do," she said. "Cryin' won't do a bit o' good. Now, you just open up the shutters and I'll help you straighten things out some, and then you go home with me an' I'll cook you up as nice a mess o' string beans as ever you et."

B.B.B. CURES

Our mail brings us every day dozens of letters about Burdock Blood Bitters. Some from merchants who want to buy it, some from people who want to know about it, and more from people who do know about it because they have tried it and been cured. One of them was from Mr. J. Gillan, B.A., 39 Gould Street, Toronto. Read how he writes:

GENTLEMEN,—During the winter of 1892 my blood became impure on account of the hearty food I ate in the cold weather. Ambition, energy and success forsook me, and all my efforts were in vain. My skin became yellow, my bowels became inactive, my liver was lumpy and hard, my eyes became inflamed, my appetite was gone, and the days and nights passed in unhappiness and restlessness

For some months I tried doctors' and patent medicines of every description, but received no benefit. Being advised by a friend to try B.B.B., I am glad to have the opportunity of testifying to the marvellous result. After using three bottles I felt much better, and when the fifth bottle was finished I enjoyed health in the greatest degree, and have done so from that day up to date. Therefore I have much pleasure in recommending B. B.B. to all poor suffering humanity who suffer from impure blood, which is the beginning and seat of all diseases.

Uses for Rhurbarb.

Every housewife who is fond of either rhubarb or oranges should make a few pots of the delicious jam that combines them both. Wipe the rhubarb until clean and dry, and cut it into fine pieces without peeling; peel half a dozen oranges, cut away all the white under the skin, take out the seeds and divide the oranges into quarters. Open each carpel that holds the pulp, and take that out, being careful to save all the juice. Put the rhubarb, orange pulp and juice with a pound and a half of granulated sugar, stir until the sugar is melted, then cook slowly until a fine mass. When it begins to thicken cool a little in a saucer. Put away in tumblers, and cover with waxed or oiled paper. A very good jam of the rhubarb is also made without the oranges. Use one pound of sugar to each pound of the fruit, and flavor each pound with the grated rind of half a large lemon. Stir and skim frequently while cooking.

An appetizing dessert is made from rhubarb by cooking it with gelatine. Weigh a pound of rhubarb, wash it and cut it into very small pieces. Sweeten while cooking with eight ounces of sugar. When the rhubarb is tender, stir into it one-fourth of a cupful of cold water. Whip the mixture well with an eggbeater and turn into a mold. When cold serve with a yellow custard sauce or without one, as you prefer.

What to Say.

One is always expected to say something when looking for the first time on a new baby, and as it is neither kind nor safe to tell the truth and say that the little, red, pudgy creature doesn't look like anything, we give a list of unpatented and uncopyrighted remarks to be used on such occasions:

"Well, isn't he cunning? He looks like you."

"I think he's going to look like his father!"

"Hasn't he dear little fingers? Do let me see his dear little toes!"

"Isn't he large?"

"Isn't he a tiny darling?"

"How bright he seems!"

"Did you ever see such a sweet little mouth?"

"Isn't he just too sweet for anything?"

"The dear little darling! I never saw

TO MY CYCLE.

Dear other self, so silent, swift and sure,
My dumb companion of delightful days,
Might fairy fingers from thy orbit rays
Of steel strike music, as the gods of yore
From reed or shell, what melodies would pour
On my glad ears; what songs of woodland ways,
Of summer's wealth of corn, or the sweet lays
Of April's budding green; while evermore
We twain, one living thing, flash like the light
Down the long tracks that stretch from sky to sky.
Thou hast thy music too; what time the noon
We drink the keen-edged air; or, darkling, fly
'Twixt hedgegroves darkened by a mystic moon.

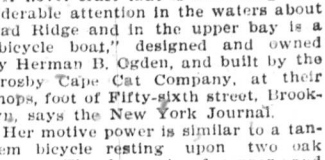
BICYCLE BOAT FOR TWO.

A Novel Craft That Promises to Catch On Quickly.

A novel craft that is attracting considerable attention in the waters about Bad Ridge and in the upper bay is a "bicycle boat," designed and owned by Herman B. Ogden, and built by the Crosby Cape Cat Company, at their shops, foot of Fifty-sixth street, Brooklyn, says the New York Journal.

Her motive power is similar to a tandem bicycle resting upon two oak braces. The frame is of copper, and steel bars rise out from it for both saddles and handle bars. Sprocket wheels and pedals identical with those of a bicycle are affixed and connected in the usual manner with a chain.

Revolving alongside the rear wheel is a cog fourteen inches in diameter, which in turn fits into a smaller one on the shaft that turns the propeller, which is a three-bladed screw of gun metal, nearly fifteen inches across. Owing to the high gearing it revolves six times for each turn of the pedal crank.



BICYCLE BOAT FOR TWO

A trial of Wednesday afternoon after her machinery was in place was most satisfactory. Mr. Crosby and one of his workmen were in the saddles and propelled the strange craft at a high rate of speed. Her steering gear is operated by chains from the handle bar in the forward end of the cockpit, the chains extending aft to a yoke on the rudder head. The peculiar construction of her bow enables her to turn completely in a twelve-foot radius.

Kind Words from the Fred Victor Mission Bible Class. On behalf of the Fred Victor Mission Bible Class I wish to express our gratitude to you for the box of Chase's Ointment which you supplied in aid of our charitable work to the infant child of Mrs. Brown, rig, 162 river street. Ten days ago the child was awfully afflicted with scald head, the face being literally one scab from forehead to chin, and in that brief time a complete cure has been effected. Surely your gift was worth its weight in gold.

This indicates the "Railroad kidney," an insidious precursor of serious illness. On the slightest symptoms of backache take one Chase's Kidney-Liver Pill—one is a dose—and thus obtain instant relief. Cream of Asparagus,

Cut the tops from a bunch of asparagus and cover with a pint of boiling water, to which you have added a teaspoonful of salt. Simmer gently for twenty minutes. Strain them and to the water add the remainder of the asparagus cut into pieces an inch long. Cook twenty minutes and press through a colander. Put to boil one quart of milk and when it reaches the boiling point stir into it two tablespoonfuls of butter and two of flour creamed together and smoothed by adding a tablespoonful of the boiling milk. Cook slowly for five minutes, then pour into the hot asparagus mixture and the asparagus tops and serve quickly. Do not boil after mixing or it will curdle.

Potato Croquettes.

Boil nine or ten potatoes. Then weigh them and use one pound. Mash them through the colander and let stand about two hours until cold. When cold add to them two ounces of butter thoroughly mix by mashing with the potato masher, or, better still, a fruit squeezer. When thoroughly mixed add half a teaspoonful of salt, half a saltspoon of pepper, one teaspoonful of chopped parsley, very little grated nutmeg. Stir all well together. Add the yolks of two eggs and the whites of so young a baby look around so?

"O please, please, let me hold him just a minute!"

Any and all of these remarks are warranted to give satisfaction just as they have been giving satisfaction from time immemorial until the present day.—Detroit Free Press.

SKIN DISEASES!

One Remedy Which has Never Failed—Tried and Tested Ointment.

Because other alleged remedies for piles, scrofula, eczematic eruptions, scald head, chafing, black heads, salt rheum and skin diseases generally have proved useless, don't condemn Dr. Chase's Ointment. It has never been known to fail. For instance, Nelson Simmons, Meyersburg, Ont., writes:

"I used Dr. Chase's Ointment for itching Piles, and can recommend it highly. Since using it I have had perfect freedom from the disease."

Peter Vanallen, L'Amable, Que., had the eczema for three years. He tried three doctors, but received no benefit. One box of Dr. Chase's Ointment and three boxes of Dr. Chase's Pills cured him completely. Large scales covered his legs and body, but the Ointment soon removed them. He will swear to these facts.

Chase's Ointment may be had from any dealer or from the manufacturers Edmanson, Bates & Co., 45 Lombard street, Toronto. Price 60 cents.

SPOKES.

Items of Interest to all Lovers of the Circling Wheel.

Here's a suggestion, and it's right from the shoulder. It's fresh. Laws should be passed which would compel the makers of bicycles to furnish to the buyer a list of just what there is in the wheel he is asked to buy. The buyer should be protected and have some assurance that he is getting what he is paying for, the proper material. If that were done there would be fewer accidents and the high grade wheels would be scarcer. It is far more necessary that we should have such laws than that we should have a law which simply requires a dealer to label oleomargarine.

"A good many people," says the Sage of Lanniganville, "are like bicycles. They roll along through life with an exceedingly proud manner until the tire is punctured, and then we find that they were mostly built on air."—Philadelphia North American.

"Well why didn't the makers put their name plate on it so we wouldn't have all of this bother?" asked a girl in a sweater.

"Because she wouldn't have it, or at least she had her own name plate made to cover theirs, which is rather small. She says that she thinks it is a shame for the manufacturers to advertise on the wheels that they sell, and that she would just as soon go round with a big button on her gown saying 'This dress was made by Madame So and So,' or 'This hat came from John Smith's.' THE CONSTANT LOVER

'Tis five-and-twenty years ago,
My Julia, since my first passion
Declared itself—I strung your bow,
For archery was then the fashion.

And every time you hit the bull
(Which, to say truth, was none too often),
I felt my brimming heart was full,
And wondered when your own would soften.

Years passed, and we to croquet turned,
And still on my uneasy pallet
I tossed, while all my fancy burned,
With dreams of hoop, and cage, and mallet.

Lawn tennis next our thoughts engaged,
Ah! When I heard your sweet voice saying,
"Love all," my hopeful heart, presaged
Some good might come from all our playing.

Anon we drove the milk-white ball
From sandy tee to sandier bunker,
I could not see the fun at all,
But you were keen as any younker.

Last—but I have some proper pride—
And now you're colder than an icicle
Because I said I would not ride
With you upon a tandem bicycle.

science

Science is "knowing how." The only secret about Scott's Emulsion is years of science. When made in large quantities and by improving methods, an emulsion must be more perfect than when made in the old-time way with mortar and pestle a few ounces at a time. This is why Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil never separates, keeps sweet for years, and why every spoonful is equal to every other spoonful. An even product throughout.

In other emulsions you are liable to get an uneven benefit—either an over or under dose. Get Scott's. Genuine has a salmon-colored wrapper.

STYLES IN CARPETINGS.

Some Such as Predominate in the Better Grades.

It cannot be said that, in the carpets made for the coming spring, we have got entirely away from the reproduction of Oriental ideas, or from the later revival of the fancies of the renaissance. The regal Savonnerie, the Aubusson and the moquette of French manufacture, the Scotch Axminster and our own best Wiltons are still dependent for design to a great extent, upon the scrolls and tangles and other charming conceits of renaissance fancy.

There is no doubt that floriations are the dominating fancy in designs for carpetings, rather than Oriental traceries. But these floriations are not after the ancient idea, when great parti-colored bouquets gave character to a Wilton or a velvet, as they did to a printed tapestry carpet. Parti-

Mrs. Parenoo—Are you quite sure this milk contains no water?"

Milkman—Madame, I assure you the lacteal fluid is perfectly free from water; why every time it rains I cover my cows with rubber blankets.—Up-to-Date.

How the Day Was Won.

"Sire," quoth the chief of staff, "the Amazons are assembling on the right wing and evidently intend to turn our left with a vigorous charge."

"Do you mean the Amazonian wheel corps?"

"Yes, sire; and they are a gallant sight. Their wheels have all been renickled and they have donned their new ashes of roses bloomers for the first time. What shall we do to avert the danger?"

"Order out the royal sprinkling carts."

"Yes, sire."

"Let them make the battle ground in front of our left wing as muddy as possible."

"Yes, sire."

"Just as soon as the charging Amazons in their new silk bloomers strike that mud they will whirl about and ride back as fast as they can pedal.

"For what, sire?"

"For their mud guards, stupid. Then if we advance rapidly enough to surprise them before they can get their helmets on straight, the day is ours."

And it was even so.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

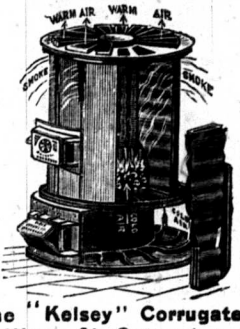
Might Have Been Worse.

Uncle Josh (as he is lifted from the railroad wreck'—W-w-whar am I?

Rescuer—You are about forty miles from Hohokus. Your train wept through a draw bridge.

Uncle Josh (with a sigh of relief)—Thank th' Lord- I've bin dreamin' thet I wuz t' home an' Betsey hed one uv her tantrums.—Judge.

The Most Economical ...House Warmer



The "Kelsey" Corrugated Warm Air Generator.

Any ordinary Hot Air Furnace will produce heat if you will only supply enough fuel. The "Kelsey" has several special and valuable features but most important is that it will give more heat with less fuel and is the most durable heater made.

The "Kelsey" fire pot being constructed of several upright, tubular, corrugated, cast iron sections (see cut) around which the fire passes and up through which the cold air passes while being heated, and this entire section being wrapped with a heavy steel casing which becomes heated by the fire striking it when passing down outside of upright sections towards smoke pipe, it in turn warms the air that passes up between this steel casing and the galvanized iron casing, this explains why the "Kelsey" has three times more radiating surface and warm air capacity than an ordinary Furnace. The "Kelsey" heats every room evenly, wheresoever located, with a nice, mild, healthful warm air that will not injure your furniture.

The "Kelsey" will heat rooms 60 feet distant.

The "Kelsey" does not heat your cellar.

The "Kelsey" is absolutely gas and dust proof.

Carpets in grounds of delicate neutral tints, which have found favor for the last several years, especially if of the Savonnerie, Aubusson and Axminster manufactures, will hold their own for fine drawing rooms and other rooms for ceremonious use, but the trend of favor for carpets, taken collectively, is in the direction of grounds in medium and deep tones of strong colors. The blues in carpets have been brought out in the indigo, marine, navy and electric tints, and in the greyish stone blue. The reds appear in the strong Pompeiian, the dark Venetian and Indian tints, with the Turkey red and vieux rouge. Terra cotta will be continued a while longer as a ground color in carpets, but there are evidences of its declining popularity, mahogany color and other browns superseding it in general favor. Carpets in grounds of the fashionable soft dark olive and moss greens, indigo and marine blues and Venetian or Indian reds, scattered over with sprays of pink or yellow roses, with a border in festoons of roses, or a dense garland of great roses, are striking and novel in effect, but they are handsome and attractive.

PINK PIQUE. BOY'S HOMESPUN.

Varying the carpets of flowered design, carpets of plain color finished with a border of floriated design are in vogue, an dstill later are borders striped in three tones of self color; but the carpets of plain color readily showing footprints and other impressions and being more liable to defacement than carpets of figured grounds, clouded and water grounds have been evolved, a floriated border being the finish.

A very rich royal Wilton shown in a collection to be brought out in the spring is of Venetian red, scattered over with sprays of roses in clear, delicate pink, festoons of roses giving character to the border. A Wilton in marine blue, of plain grounding, has a dense garland of hollyhocks of greatly magnified size and several colors in the border. A very remarkable carpet in the green of a lightly shaded rippling stream of watered grounding, has the border in a design of dense garland of the white water-lilly laid on a growth of the cat-tail. Very attractive carpets of the Wilton weave are of plain groundings in jade, green, electric blue and a medium pale tone of vieux rouge, with floriated borders—paper tones being more agreeable than the deeper tones of color in the plain carpets. And very available, useful and desidable carpets in the new strong colors have designs in tangles, leaves, small blossoms and arabesque traceries brought out in a distinctly paler tone of the ground color, or two or three different tones of the self color.

Much favor attaches to the carpets for bedrooms and nurseries in the blue-and-white of the old Delft, the Owari and the Imari of Japanese porcelains and blue Dresden china.—Dec.

There Is a Difference.

"What, you afraid of that little woman?" asked the officer, in amazement.

"Yes," said Henpeck, as he mopped his feverish brow, "and you would be afraid of her, too, if the marriage certificate with which she is armed had your name on it instead of mine."—Washington Times.

Without Wheels.

Mrs. De Wolf—Have you ever observed what a fine carriage Mrs. Smitely has—such a fine gait?

Miss Smitherly—Yes, and I have noticed it's a horseless carriage, too.

Scrofula

Infests the blood of humanity. It appears in varied forms, but is forced to yield to Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and vitalizes the blood and cures all such diseases. Read this:

"In September, 1894, I made a misstep and injured my ankle. Very soon afterwards.

A Sore

two inches across formed and in walking to favor it I sprained my ankle. The sore became worse; I could not put my boot on and I thought I should have to give up at every step. I could not get any relief and had to stop work. I read of a cure of a similar case by Hood's Sarsaparilla and concluded to try it. Before I had taken all of two bottles the sore had healed and the swelling had gone down. My is now well and I have been greatly benefited otherwise. I have increased in weight and am in better health. I cannot say enough in praise of Hood's Sarsaparilla." MRS. H. BLAKE, So. Berwick, Me.

IN CASE OF DROUGHT.

How to Obtain and Retain Moisture in the Hot, Dry Weather.

If we put the end of a small glass tube into water, the water will rise in it. If, instead of being put in water, a tube is put into a very heavy liquid, such as mercury, instead of rising above the surrounding liquid it will not rise up in the tube to its level, (see Fig. I. and II.). The finer these tubes are the higher the water will rise, while the opposite will be the result in the case of the mercury. That which causes the water to rise is called capillary attraction. That which prevents the mercury from rising is called capillary repulsion.

Before going any further it might be interesting to some to explain the meaning of capillary. Capillus means hair. Capillary means resembling a hair; fine, minute, small in diameter, though long. Thus a capillary tube means a tube that is hair-like.

A glass tube has been taken for purposes of illustration, but you must not think that such a tube is necessary before water will rise. A sponge soaks up water; that is, water rises through and fills the minute spaces which exist in the structure of the sponge. Those though life for the person who keeps in health. With a torpid liver and the impure blood that follows it, you are an easy prey to all sorts of ailments. That "used-up" feeling is the first warning that your liver isn't doing its work.

That is the time to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, to repel disease and build up the needed flesh and strength, there's nothing to equal it. It rouses every organ into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, braces up the whole system, and restores health and vigor.

DYSPEPSIA, CHRONIC DIARRHEA.

MISS GIBSON.

MISS SARAH GIBSON, of Saco, Bradford Co., Penn., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of your Family Medicines. For years I suffered with stomach trouble; it became so very bad I could not eat the slightest food without terrible distress.

I began taking your medicines, as you advised, and now can eat almost anything I want. I have taken about one dozen bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I also suffered for three years with chronic diarrhea; could get no help till I began the use of Dr. Pierce's Compound Extract of Smart-Weed; one-half dozen bottles cured me. I have also taken Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for female weakness with good results."

large spaces which we so plainly see in it are not filled with water. The oil rises in the lamp-wick by capillary attraction. The minute spaces between the fibres of the wick serve the same purpose as the small hole in a glass tube. The finer the material in the wick, the smaller and more numerous the holes will be and the higher the oil will rise through it. When house plants are watered, very often the water is put into the saucer of the flower pot. We say the oil soaks the water up; in fact, the water rises through the spaces between the particles of soil (see Fig. III.).

The finer the soil the smaller these spaces will be and the higher the water will rise, as it did in the glass tubes.

It is well known that plants on a sandy soil suffer during a dry season much more than those on a clay or loamy soil. This is due to the spaces in the latter being much finer than those in the sand, as the particles are not nearly so large. This being the case, they hold water much better when they have it, and then the water will rise much more readily from the water level. In this way, during a dry time, the plants on clay may be getting wter from below, while those on sandy land may die for want of it.

Now, if we understand some of the forces which influence the rise of water in a substance, we need to know two more things, and then this knowledge may be useful on the farm. First, What can we do to put the soil into a condition that is favorable to the rise of water from the water level; then what can we do to prevent it from evaporating at the top, so that the crops may get the mosture?

The spaces need to be small. Thus, to roll land that is too loose, as sand or other land that has been plowed in the spring, is a benefit. Again, many will have noticed that land that is drained never suffers as much during a dry season as does undrained land. I have seen places where a person could distinctly notice that the crop beside a drain was better during a drought than the crop farther off. What is the reason of this? An underdrain never takes water away that rises by capillary attraction, but that which lies in the larger spaces, and which, if allowed to remain, is injurious to plant growth. Land that is not drained will often be water-soaked during part of the season; and when it does dry out, will leave the land full of cracks, which tend to prevent the water from coming up, and allow it to evaporate more quickly. On the other hand, land that is well drained is left in a condition much more favorable to the rise of water by capillary attraction from the water level.

After doing as much as we can to put the soil into a condition favorable to the rise of this moisture, we need to do as much as we can to hinder its evaporation at the surface. Most farmers have seen a mulch of rubbish, chips, straw, or some other loose material put around fruit trees to keep the ground moist in dry weather. The water does not rise through this loose stuff, and is largely protected from the wind and sun's rays and does not evaporate; as a consequence the soil keeps moist. A well worked summer fallow, on clay or loamy soil, will be moist even if rain has not fallen for some weeks.

Now, some may say that land that is worked up dries out. That is true in regard to the portion of the soil that is worked; but this need be only one, two or three inches, and these few inches of loose soil at the top serve the same purpose as the chips and the like around the fruit trees. It prevents the moisture from coming right to the top and protects it from being evaporated by the wind and sun. In this way we keep it in the proper place for the plant to make use of it. This explains the reason that there is such an advantage in surface cultivation during dry weather. The drier the weather, the oftener will it pay us to cultivate such crops as permit of it.

People often think of the moisture in the soil as altogether due to the rainfall; and as they cannot control this, they have thought that they could not guard against loss by drought; but by understanding capillary attraction and how to avail ourselves of its aid, we will be able, in many cases, to greatly lessen the evils which result from a lack of rain.—E. F. White, B. S.A., Algoma, in London Farmer's Advocate.

Odoroma is the name of the latest thing for the teeth, introduced into Canada by the Aroma Chemical Co. It seems to be meeting with the appreciation of the elite of Toronto at any rate, owing, no doubt, to it having been endorsed by well-known professional experts as much as to recommendation from one to another. That it is a good thing is beyond question, that it will rapidly become popular is equally certain.

The Craze.

The bibycle craze seems to be at its height and it is very dangerous for pedestrians to cross any of the principal thoroughfares without being run into by a cycle, as none carry bells. A very quiet wedding took place at Yarker on Monday of last week, when Mr. Arthur W. The ceremony was performed at St. Anthony's church, Centreville, by Rev. E. F. Cooper, C.S.S.R., of Detroit, brother of the groom. The bride was attired in a cream serge and looked very pretty, being assisted by Miss Mollie Lahey, of Sydenham. The groom was assisted by Wm. J. Carroll. Owing to the death of a near relative there were only the families and Rev. Father Hartigan present.

The Tupper Government was routed on Tuesday, horse, foot and artillery. The people rose in their might and condemned the boodling and maladministration that has so long characterized the regime of the Conservative Government. The Frenchmen of Quebec put Ontario to shame and set at defiance the dictation of the Hierarchy, showing that they put the welfare of the country paramount to the needs of the church. The landslide that struck the Government was complete and well deserved. All honest Conservatives, who put country before party, are pleased at the result, although their pleasure is somewhat tinctured with sadness by the gross miss management that brought such a strong condemnation. The Government was corrupt, moribund and vacillating. Under their management the country was rapidly drifting towards bankruptcy and there was apparently not one man in the whole cabinet able to avert the threatened disaster or suggest a remedy for the betterment of our conditions or apply it if devised. The coercion policy of the Government was a wicked attempt to float into power on a wave of sectarian hate and racial prejudices and met the fate it deserved. Had Sir Charles Tupper been returned to power, under his manipulation the school question would undoubtedly have disintegrated confederation. Mr. Laurier will adjust it to the satisfaction of both parties concerned. There will be no Remedial Legislation, but a comprehensive investigation into the educational affairs of the Province of Manitoba will be instituted, the defects remedied and by a few mutual concessions the Manitoba School question will be settled once and for all, and in a manner satisfactorily alike to the majority and the minority of Manitoba, who are the, or ought to be, the only parties concerned. The rout of the Government was complete. The three Quebec ministers, chosen more on account of their zeal for the church than their fitness for the positions, were badly defeated. Mr. Dickie, another minister was also defeated, and Speaker White shared a like fate. The Liberals will have a majority of 28 over all in the next House and the total majority against the Government is 52. The standing of the parties is as follows:

Conservative majority, 30.

Election day passed off very quietly in Napanee. There was little or no excitement until between eight and nine o'clock when the returns from outside started to come in. A joint committee had arranged to have the returns from the two telegraph offices announced from the balcony on the town hall, and by half-past eight the market square was jammed with a sea of humanity all anxious to ascertain the result of the fray. Kingston was the first place heard from and when Britton's grand victory in the Limestone City was announced the crowd went wild with enthusiasm. The cheering intelligence from Quebec put the crowd in immense good humor, and every Liberal gain was greeted with deafening cheers. About 8:30 Mr. Charles Stevens appeared on the balcony and addressed the crowd. He said there had been enough boodle spent by the Wilson party to upset five elections and if his friends would stand by him and the grits would guarantee not to put a man in the field he would protest the election. He believed that in a straight fight he could defeat Mr. Wilson. He had fought a clean fight, and even his political enemies, (he didn't believe he had any personal enemies) gave him credit for being a plucky little fellow and making a good fight. Mr. Stevens said the Wilson party had spent over $3,000 in bribing the electorate, and he had spent $73 on Monday night in livery hire tracking the boodlers. Mr. Wilson won by bribery and corruption, (cheers.)

Mr. Wilson made a short speech which was well received. He had no knowledge of the bribery which his honorable friend charged him with. He was proud of his native town which had given him such a handsome majority. He hoped that now the election was over they would all bury their differences and dwell in peace and harmony for the next five years. (cheers.)

Mr. Switzer made a neat little speech. He said he was defeated by the votes of those who were expected to stand by him He was not disheartened or discourged by the result. He had no personal feelings against either of the candidates. Between himself and Mr. Wilson the best of good feeling prevailed throughout. He laid his defeat to the farmer, and thanked the town for the good vote they had given him. (cheers.)

Mr. Stevens created a good deal of excitement a few minutes afterwards by throwing about two or three hundred of his campaign buttons among the boys for them to to scramble for.

The Conservatives went home early and left the Reformers in possession of the town hall. Meanwhile the boys got up a procession and "Whooper'd-her-up" for Laurier in good shape. They went up and down the streets until a late hour singing

"Good-by Tupper
We are going to leave you now."

The band turned out also, and with the cheering of enthusiasts and the noise of fire crackers things were pretty lively for a time.

One of the boarders of the Paisley House secured a piece of factory cotton and painted upon it the words, "Canada for Laurier." This he stretched across the window of his room and put a lamp behind it. When the crowd on the market perceived it they yelled themselves hoarse. The crowd was on the whole a good natured one, but the majority of the Grits could hardly restrain from standing on their heads, they felt so elated. A large

The Local Paper.

An expatriated Canadian forwards the following from California :

It's not the biggest paper
That I pounce upon the first ;
Nor the one that has most in it
That I want to see the worst ;
But the little country paper
From the place I used to live
Is the most delightful reading
That a fellow can conceive.

You read the locals over
With an eagerness and zest ;
It's like shaking hands with people
That you like the heartiest ;
And though there's little in them
Still each name is like a face,
And the past beams down upon you
As the sprawling lines you trace.

You see the home of childhood
And the little country store,
And the face of your old sweetheart
In the vine-embowered door.
And the old school and your playmates
Mingle with the locals read,
Notwithstanding some are married,
Notwithstanding some are dead.

There's the forest long departed,
And the little swimming hole,
And the past crowds in upon you,
Filling mind and eyes and soul ;
And the little country paper
From the crude and distant press,
With its freight of homely items,
Softens life like a caress.

"Tupper Must Go."

Mr. E. Huff is one of the "old timers." A short time ago he got thinking that it would soon be time for the frogs in the pond adjacent to his residence to open the serenade season. Before they opened their chorus he prophesied as follows :

"The frogs will wake and sing pretty soon
For the elections come off sometime in June
They'll get up on a log all in a row
And the song they will sing is "Tupper must go."

On Saturday the 20th inst the frogs commenced operations. The high muck-a muck or king frog of the bog sang the following solo, as interpreted by Mr. Huff, his subject joining in the chorus :—

"I have a good army,
I'm king of the bog,
Away with Old Tupper
He is an old hog.

CHORUS.

Tupper must go,
Tupper must go,
All join in the chorus,
Tupper must go.

You can tell by his actions
You know by his speech,
He's a regular old humbug,
A terrible old leech.

Away to your barracks,
And do as you please,
Give Tupper a broadside,
And then stand at ease,"

For Tupper must go,
Tupper must go.

One significant feature is the poor showing of the third party men. The third party men hurt the Liberal party considerably and had they refrained from dividing the vote in so many constituencies the result in Ontario would have been still more disasterous for the ministerialists. Altogether the country has just reason to feel thankful at the result, which will, we trust, usher in a brighter and better era in this Canada of ours.

CONTEST IN LENNOX,

Although we hoped for better things it cannot be said that the unexpected has happened in Lennox. With two candidates in the field opposed to the Government and dividing the Liberal and Independent vote it is a matter for congratulation that Mr. Switzer polled so good a vote. In a straight fight we believe Mr. Wilson would have been defeated. As it is he owes his election to Mr. Stevens' presence in the field The Liberals did all in their power to avoid a three cornered fight, Mr. Allison retiring in favor of Mr. Switzer, but Mr. Stevens thought fit to enter the field and the most natural thing under the circumstance happened. Another thing that militated against Mr. Switzer was the bad state of the lists. Mr. Wilson had everything his own way in the revision and as a matter of course manipulated them to his own advantage. In connection with this revision somebody is guilty of gross dishonesty. Many an honest voter whose name was put on the list by the revising judge was knocked off in the Government printing office at Ottawa. One good Grit and his son, who own 300 acres of land, were disfranchised, while the hired man, an uncompromising Tory, had his name on the list and of course put in a plumper for Tupperism. The vote in Lennox this year was a light one compared with the last election. In 1892 when Mr. Wilson defeated Mr. Allison the vote stood 1675 and 1650 respectively, making a total of 3,325, while this year the total vote polled for the three candidates amounted to 2911, 414 less than was polled in 92 It is alleged that bribery and personation helped to swell Mr. Wilson's majority, but later developments will prove the truth or falsity of this. Mr. Switzer made a clean, manly, honest fight and has no reason to feel ashamed of the result. As it is the good old county of Lennox showed itself adverse to Tupperism by a big majority.

THE ELECTION OF 1891.

At the general elections in March 1891, D. W. Allison beat Uriah Wilson by a majorty of 57. He was unseated and in the by-election, on Feb. 4th. 1892, the vote stood as follows :

About 11 o'clock the crowd congregated in the town hall and Mr. S. C. Warner read out the returns as they were received. Mr. Geo. D. Hawley was called upon for a speech, and responded gracefully and ably. At the meeting the Liberals who are taking the Montreal Star agreed to stop taking such a sheet immediately.

We wonder if Sir Charles Tupper will claim the credit of his own defeat.

Thank Heaven we have about seen the last of the Dominion Franchise Act.

It is stated on good authority that the election of Uriah Wilson will be protested.

Charles Stevens put up a plucky fight and came within 479 votes of being elected.

Loads of money and personators were a more potent factor in carrying Winnipeg than Hugh John's nose.

H M. Deroche, Q.C., says : The honest expression of the good old County of Lennox is 500 hundred of a majority against the Tupper Government.

N. Clarke Wallace received the largest majority ever polled for a candidate in Canada. He was elected over his two opponents by a majority of 3,425.

The Conservatives in town, as a rule, seem well pleased with the defeat of the Government. The general opinion is that they have been in power too long.

T. G Davis : "That's right boys, jump in and enjoy yourselves, its the first opportunity you Grits have had in eighteen years. For my own part I'm almost inclined to rejoice with you."

Uriah Wilson, M. P. : While I regret to see the Government, including a number of my old friends defeated I cannot say that I am surprised or sorry at the result. Looking at it from an anti-remedialist standpoint the result in Quebec is gratifying. The power of the Bishops is broken. Laurier will have a number of difficult questions to settle, among others the disquieting School Question and Prohibition. In the meantime on the opposition benches I will have an opportunity of airing a number of little hobbies of my own which as a Government supporter I would be in a measure precluded from bringing up.

A. EDGAR, Teacher.

A Sure and Simple Protection from Cold.

Good meals and warm clothing are of more value—if you haven't got them—than anything else. World wide fame seems of small account if you are hungry or the wind is whistling through your body. So any new feature which makes comfortable clothing possible for every one is of more real importance to us than the discovery of a new planet. This explains the great popularity of Fibre Chamois, an interlining made from pure spruce fibre, which gives a perfect healthful warmth without adding weight or bulk. The reason is that it is an absolute non-conductor of either heat or cold. The rawest winds can't get through the clothing lined with it, nor will it let the natural heat of the body escape. So that it ensures comfort in all weather, for a trifling expense.

Mr. Charles Stevens gave his organizers and agents an outing in the steam yacht "Florence" on Thursday. No doubt it was an agreeable one after their arduous labors during the past few weeks in tracking boodlers, etc.

A DAY OF DAYS.

Within the calendar of life
Of every human heart,
There shines a day with beauty rife,
That stands alone, apart—
Distinct from other times and tides,
The sorrowful or gay,
With Memory it ever abides,
A rose-crowned, perfect day.
No matter if fast fades the gold
Of other morns to gray,
And angel hands may not have rolled
The stone of grief away—
Bright shining through life's fond regret,
Through cloud and tearful haze,
Love's golden sun has never set
Upon that day of days.

SOME GOOD 'UNS.

A Budget of Lately Recorded Wit From Harper's Round Table.

Pat was an Irishman, and he was trying to ride a bicycle. "The pesky wheel," as he put it, wuldn't stay straight, but wriggled this way and that, every now and then landing him in a heap on the road. A number of people gathered around to see the fun. At last, however, he got started fairly well, and was moving along smoothly, when the wheel gave a lurch, and in attempting to recover himself he made a desperate lunge, and over he went, hitting the curb stone in his downfall. A policeman ran up, and after straightening him out, demanded that he give an account of himself.

"Faith!" said Pat, "I'd loikt to see any man give an account when he has once lost his balance."

There had been a lack of men joining the ranks, and the colnel was visiting a recruiting station, inspecting the workings of his recruiting sergeants. Suddenly a terrific nois of shouting and shuffling of feet came through the open window. Now it came from the stairway, intermingled with sundry loud bumps and knocks, and the door burst open, showing a red-faced, perspiring little sergeant pushing, hauling and tugging at a big country lad. The latter was doing his best to escape the firm grip of the soldier.

"Halt!" cried the Colonel. "How is this, sir?" he said to the sergeant. "Is this the way you secure recruits—by force, sir?"

The red-faced sergeant looked up and down, then at the colnel, and blurted out: "Sure, sir, the only way to get them volunteers is by force, sir."

It was a battered war-scarred veteran that ambled into the pension office one day last week, and slowly approaching the clerk of the office, asked in a quivering voice, where he could get a pension.

"In what company did you serve," asked the clerk.

"Company G, of the Sixth Volunteers."

"Ever injured in battle?"

The veteran drew himself up to his full height, which was distressingly little, and exclaimed, in as loud a voice as he could muster.

"Yes, sir; I was hit by a shell in the battle of Bull Run, and knocked all to pieces."

"Dear me!" said the clerk, smiling. "You're a wonderful veteran. Where do you lie, and how do you manage to keep alive your many pieces?"

"That's the trouble, sir, and the very reason I want a pension, 'cause I've had trouble ever since taking up my quarters wherever I could find them."

Ah, she was wondorous fair!
Then up to her dainty room she went,
Her heart o'erflowing with sentiment
And breathed for him a prayer.

And he walked slowly down the street
With his lips still warm from kisses sweet
Through the moonlight soft and clear;
In his mind still lingered her beautiful face
As he gaily turned into Conger's place
And loaded himself with beer.

A YEAR'S SUNSHINE.

Will Not Fade Garments Dyed With Diamond Dyes.

No other method of home dyeing gives colors one-half so fast and beautiful as Diamond Dyes. The colors are full, rich, bright and handsome, and so fast and firm that a year's sunshine will not cause them to fade.

It is not so when the garments and goods are dyed with the poor imitation dyes that many dealers sell for the sake of large profits.

Goods colored with the crude dyes soon fade, and become dingy and ugly. It should be borne in mind, that the common dyes cost the same price as the tested and popular Diamond Dyes, but cannot for a moment be compared with them.

If you would save money and time, put your trust at all times in the never-failing Diamond Dyes; the user is never disappointed. Refuse inferior dyes offered by dealers, and insist upon having the "Diamond."

BERRY BULLETIN.

A Timely Warning as to June Treatment of Small Fruits.

Fruits and vegetables are composed mostly of water. No component part of same is so plentiful, yet so difficult to supply in proper quantity. The fruit grower should then know how to guard against seasons of drouth and preserve the natural moisture of the soil. This can be done in two ways.

First—By irrigation, which is practicable only in certain favored localities by ditches and canals and by various pumping devices, pipes and drains, necessarily limited in extent, and then only with considerable expense. Success by these methods requires about 1,000 barrels of water per acre for each application.

Second—By retaining moisture already in the soil by mulching. This may be practiced by all. Well prepared ground receives sufficient moisture in spring to fully mature the largest crop. Tons of moisture from every acre are escaping daily in the growing season. The best and most practical way to preserve this moisture and place it just where it is most available for plant use is by frequent shallow cultivation, forming a fine earth mulch. This applies to gardens and all hoed crops. Where soil cannot all be cultivated, as with small fruits, then use manure, leaves, straw, clover, marsh hay, or any material to shade the ground and retard evaporation. With coarse mulch close around fruit plants, and a fine earth mulch between the rows, large crops may be carried safely through severe drouths. Commence at once and continue until products are mature.

The new strawberry plant should not be allowed to bear fruit the first season. Pick off all fruit stems as soon as they appear. Three methods of training the strawberry are in use, the hill system, where all runners are removed; the narrow row, where only part of new runners are allowed to form plant; and the full matted row, where plants are allowed to fill all the space excepting a narrow path between rows. All have advocates, and all have special merits, depending on soil, climate, variety and grower. The full matted row is most used, being easiest to manage.

Guard against too many plants in small space. They consume moisture, suffer from drouth and produce small berries. Each plant should have from four to six inches square space in which to grow and mature its fruits. When new canes of the raspberries and blackberries are 15 to 18 inches high, pinch off the top about three inches. This will cause side branches to grow, making well formed bushes and greatly increase the bearing surface of the canes.

MISREPRESENTATIONS.

MR. EDITOR—My attention has been called to an issue of the Napanee Star of June 19th, in which an editorial refers to me as, 'ragling for the McCarthyite nomination, and "letters can be produced to settle that question" all of which is a pure fabrication.

So far from having desired Mr. McCarthy's endorsation it was offered me, and with due defence to Mr. McCarthy, I declined the honor, because it would be a violation of the first principle of Potronism, to affiliate myself solidly with Mr. McCarthy, or either of the old parties — Although appreciating McCarthyism at its full value, I regard our principles as quite superior. When he arrived in Napanee Mr. Haycock and I were advised, and urged, to see him by some of his admirers, and we met him in the corridor of the hotel, and were invited to his room. He asked me "why I could not come out as his supporter, his follower, etc.. and I declined for the reasons already given. He replied "think it over and return at seven o'clock and let me know your final decision." Mr. Haycock returned by my instruction at the appointed time, and informed him our first decision was final, and I think it fortunate that Mr. Haycock was with me and can verify the truth of what I affirm, and this is called "angling for the McCarthy endorsation."

By the way, Mr. Editor, some one about the office of your contemporary appears to be troubled with too vivid an imagination to be strickly accurate concerning matters political. Surely neither the venerable editor nor the astute proprietor could be guilty of such vagaries. Possiby the printer's devil may have found his way into the editorial sanctum unobserved and thus plays havoc with his masters best interests.

E. B. SWITZER.

A Matter of Necessity.

"Look here, Potter!" demanded the able editor of the Hawville Clarion, addressing Dr. Potter, the urbane Coroner and likewise the proprietor of the Early Bird ice cream parlor: "What under the sun caused you fellows to bring in a verdict of 'death from unknown causes,' in the case of young Pettifish, whom everybody knows proposed to Miss Pearl Kinsabby in her mother's kitchen, which so offended the high-spirited young lady, who was already engaged to another gentleman, that she caught up a saucepan of boiling water from the stove and turned it wrong side up on his head, whereat he uttered a fiendish yell and plunged headlong through the window without asking to be excused or stopping to open the window, and either caused his own death by cutting his throat on the broken glass or by breaking his neck over the saw-buck which stood on the ground under the window and upon which he fell, or by a combination of both? I don't see how in the name of wonder the jury could make 'unknown causes' out of that."

"We considered that that was the best we could do under the circumstances," replied the Coroner, cheerily. "You see, the only blanks for filling in with the verdict we had left were for death from unknown causes or by shooting by an officer in discharge of his duty, and as we all liked the young feller pretty well, we jest drew straws to see which it would be, and the unknown causes won. We didn't have, and never have had, any blanks about hot water on the head or cutting the throat with window glass or breaking the neck on saw-bucks, and so it looks to me as if we did pretty middling well under the circumstances.

Miss Lucia Mallory Campbellford is at present the guests of Mrs. Wilmot Hawley.

The number of young ladies of the village has been added to by the return of Miss Annie Petzold, from Eganville and the arrival of Miss Frieda Sdneider, Stenbenville O, who is going to stay with her brother, the Rev F. W. Sdeneider, of this place.

A public exam. was held at our village school on Friday last. A number of visitors were present who without exception expressed themselves very well satisfied with the performances of the pupils and the progress they have made under the teaching of our present teacher, Mr. Herbert Gage

The Rev. H. Shephard, who has succeeded in making many friends here is going to leave us and is succeeded by the Rev. Mr. Wagg, late of Ompah, who has at present taken up his quarters at the Chatson House Statute Labour and other roadwork is now the order of the day.

What a Plowman Needs

It requires not only a good eye in the teamster, but a strong, active team to do good work in marking out furrows and making straight rows across a field. If the team is not strong enough for the work, it will dodge from one side to another in order to relieve the excessive strain on its shoulders. This will make absolutely straight rows impossible, no matter how correct the eye of the plowman may be. The first furrow across the field is harder on the team than any later one, especially if the field be in sod. After it is cut each after furrow requires less lifting to turn it over, as on the plow side there is an open furrow instead of an unbroken sod, so that only one slice of the soil has to be cut. But the first furrow for this reason should be shallower than those that follow it. This will make less of a ridge where it lies.

Miss Ethel Hinch, of Napanee, on the 4.25 train Saturday, just a trifle too late to attend the funeral of Luella Finkle.

A NASTY TONGUE

Is Proof Positive That You Are in Danger

Thousands Die Each Year From Liver Trouble.

Paine's Celery Compound Promptly Cures This Insidious Disease.

The liver is the great housekeeper of our health. On its right and proper action depends our enjoyments of life

One of the simplest indications of a disordered and diseased liver is a nasty tongue—furred and coated. The coated tongue is proof positive that your liver is not working well. Other symptoms are as follows: nauseous taste in the mouth, pains under the shoulder blades, and in the region of the kidneys. The mental symptoms of liver trouble are often far worse than the bodily ills. Sufferers experience mental anguish, gloomy forebodings, melancholy, and a general feeling of digust with life. When these bodily and mental troubles are experienced, your liver tells you it wants help. If help is not given at once, sickness and death must result.

Thousands have found Paine's Celery Compound a sure and certain cure for liver disease. It always acts promptly on the great nervous system and restores that healthy and natural action that the liver must have at all times. Paine's Celery Compound drives from the system all the poisons that have accumulated, and the sick one regains his old-time vim and energy; the muscles and tissues are made hard and firm, the skin clear and fresh, so that perfect health is the result.

Read this letter witten by Mrs. George Durant, of Elma, Ont. No stronger proof can be given of the virtues and powers of Paine's Celery Compound in the cure of liver troubles:

"For many years I have been a sufferer from liver troubles, and have doctored with several physicians, but only found relief for a very short time. My husband advised me to try your Paine's Celery Compound. I did so, and found so much relief from the first bottle that I continued, and I am now using the third bottle. Your Compound has done more for me than any physician. For months before using the Compound I never had one night of sound sleep; but now I can go to bed and sleep soundly and naturally, and feel like a new creature in the morning."

The Napanee Express

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, JULY 3, 1896.

LISTEN to the following from the Kingston News: "The diabolical scheme has succeeded, and Mr. Pettet defeats Mr. Boulter by a majority of 199." Language is inadequate to do justice to the scheme. It was the same "diabolical scheme" that defeated the Government of Sir Charles Tupper—the ballots of the free and independent electors of Canada.

IT will be a safe plan for the Liberals to put on the free list all articles which compete with combine products. Whenever a concern by shutting up and turning out its men schemes to produce artificial scarcity and dearness, or to bulldoze parliament, that hour the classes of goods it produces ought to be placed on the free list. We want plenty in this country—plenty of cheap goods and plenty of work making them.—Ex.

IF the honest expression of the electorate of Lennox was defeated by the free and corrupt use of money steps should at once be taken to protest Mr. Wilson's election. It is freely asserted that Mr. Wilson's agents had resort to bribery to ensure his election and that it was the distribution of the boodle that turned the tide in his favor. If an investigation establishes the truth of these rumors no pains or expense should be spared to unseat Mr. Wilson, and bring the work home to the guilty ones. In a straight fight we believe the Liberals could carry Lennox with an overwhelming majority.

SINCE the rout of the Conservative party Tory newspapers have been industriously preaching blue ruin and showing their patriotism by appeals to racial prejudices. The renegade Mail has raised the race cry and

SALAD MAKING.

Success Attends Only Those Who Use Brains in the Composition.

The proper dressing for a chicken salad is not suitable for vegetables. A French dressing, with slight variations, may be used on a great many different vegetables. For two heads of lettuce mix in a cup one saladspoonful of the best tarragon vinegar, an even half teaspoonful of salt, a scant half saltspoonful of white pepper. Never mix salt and pepper with oil, because the salt does not dissolve, and will give a gritty taste to the salad. Break up the head of lettuce, remove the green leaves and use only the crisp bleached leaves. Tear the large leaves in pieces. Wash them all in cold water. Drain them carefully in a wire salad basket (a flour sieve will do). When the leaves are freed from water, set them on the ice to become chilled for fifteen or twenty minutes, or until you are ready to serve the salad. Pour over the salad, at the table, a saladspoonful and a half of the best olive oil. Toss the leaves until they are thoroughly coated; then pour over them the vinegar, salt and pepper and toss again very carefully.

Great care must be exercised in purchasing oil, as much of the oil sold at groceries is unfit for use. Only the best oil of the olive will do for salad. Do not allow anybody to persuade you that cottonseed oil, or any other product of doubtful origin will do. Purchase the best oil of a trustworthy dealer, and if you are fond of salads, buy it by the gallon at this season of the year and keep it in a cold storeroom, bringing only a small quantity out at a time. It is not safe to keep a large bottle of it in a warm dining room, or in a dining room pantry, as it is likely to spoil before it can be used up.

The success of a lettuce salad depends on selection of a tender, well bleached head of lettuce; on proper preparation of the leaves in washing, drying and chilling them, so that they come to the table crisp and cold; and on the use of the best ingredients. Omission of one thing prescribed in the preparation will make it a failure. This is the reason why the salad is so seldom what it should be.

If you desire to omit the oil, substitute three tablespoonfuls of thick, sweet cream for it, and prepare the salad otherwise in the same way. This salad may be varied by preparing it from one head of lettuce and two firm, red tomatoes, peeled, chilled and cut in slices. Sometimes two hard-boiled eggs are sliced and added to a plain salad of lettuce.

Two heads of firm white celery, washed and cut in square lengths, drained carefully and chilled, make a delicious salad to serve with game. It is dressed like a lettuce salad. As a change, a clove of garlic, sprinkled with a little salt, is sometimes peeled and rubbed vigorously on the sides of the salad bowl before the salad is put in. This gives all the flavor of garlic necessary. It is an excellent addition to an escarole salad. The escarole is a species of chicory, with broad, flat, bleached leaves that comes to market in winterm. It is a bleacher herb raised in cellars and must be handled carefully to prevent its wilting and becoming soft. Cut off the root if it is on the bunch. Do not wash the leaves unless they are very sandy, but wipe each one off very carefully. Cut off the green portion of the leaf. A pair of scissors is most convenient for the purpose. Chill the leaves and dress them with the French dressing used for lettuce.—Philadelphia Times.

He Will Take No Risk.

Shrewdness of a Wellknown City Merchant.

HE KNEW WHAT WAS GOOD FOR HIM.

In winter when Canadians spend a large portion of their time indoors and cannot have the same variety of fresh food as in summer and fall, indigestion and dyspepsia afflict a majority. "If anybody will tell me that dyspepsia in its advanced stages is perfectly curable," said a Toronto merchant, "I will take his word. Personally I run no risks. As soon as I feel a sense of weight in the stomach, after a meal, I know that my blood is sluggish in circulation. In my business I cannot take much exercise, and I fight the first sign of stomach troubles with Scott's Sarsaparilla. It has never failed me, and has saved me many a doctor's bill."

Scott's Sarsaparilla possesses medicinal properties superior to all other so-called sarsaparillas made. As a remedy for indigestion, rheumatism, pimples, scrofula and all blood diseases, physicians state that its equal was never known. Sold at $1 per bottle, of all dealers.

THE LATEST SUMMER GOWNS.

New and striking effects in the way of cotton gowns always appear after the first of June. New cotton crepes, organdies, dimities and piques delight the eyes of everyone able to wear cotton gowns. I say "able," for many women from climate, health or occupation are debarred from wearing any but woolen gowns. Even heavy Irish linen has been taken for midsummer wear, and gold lace appears on grass linen. Nothing seems incongruous; Every possible combination of material and color is before us.

So much silk is mixed with the finer qualities of cotton dress goods that the material is quite suitable for wear on very dressy occasions; the trimmings, too, which are of ribbon, lace and fine open work embroidery, are very elaborate.

The linen suits referred to are given a tailor-made look by stitched bias straps, an inch wide before turning them under, down every seam of the coat, which has a godet or flute back, about four inches long, and loose fronts fully seven inches below the waist-line; these also have very large revers of the material doubled and stitched twice on the edge to correspond with the wrists and lower part of the coat. A belt of linen, gold ribbon or white leather is worn outside of the back, passed through slits in the sides and buckles in front. The sleeves are very large, yet, of course, are unlined. The skirt is unlined, has a hem ten inches deep, is six yards wide and laid in a loose box-plait in front. White Japanese silk or nainsook shirt waists are to be worn with such suits, a plastron of dotted Swiss trimmed with yellow Valenciennes lace, or a white wool sweater made with the rolled collar band, the lower part being touched inside of the skirt.

Pique, duck and linen should be shrunk before making up. Duck suits have the little coats described above, and also the blouse coat cut like a loose sacque, belted and the fronts allowed to drop over the waist-line. All seams are strapped, and the edges are finished with two rows of stitching. Duck this season is of a very fine, smooth, even weave. Mail has raised the race cry and parott like the smaller fry have taken it up and are conducting a crusade against the French Canadians and warning the English speaking people against French domination. The Kingston News on Monday, following in the wake of the Mail, had a lengthy editorial in which the following occurred: "Mercier is dead, but his spirit is marching on. His fellow-boodlers are soon to be entrenched in power at Ottawa, and the latter-day revival of his "National" movement must be reflected in any Cabinet Mr. Laurier can form. Now that the French mind is inflamed with dreams of racial glory, English speaking Liberals must beware what they say." What the English speaking Liberals and all true Canadians must beware of is crafty demagogues who in an attempt to gain place and power endeavor to inflame the passions of the people by appeals to racial feelings. Mercier is dead. He was punished for his misdeeds by the Liberals of Quebec. The punishment meted out to Mercier is in direct contrast to the reception accorded Chapleau, Langivin, Caron, McGreevy and others, by the Conservative party. The French Canadians of Quebec have risen superior to the dictates of the clerical lash and refused to support the arch boodler Tupper and his policy of coercion. Mr. Laurier is a high minded statesman and loyal to the British crown. He looks to England for his ideals and is first of all a Canadian. The people of Canada look to him to unravel the tangles of 18 years of misrule. The people have faith in his ability and patriotism. The racial cry will prove as impotent to effect his defeat as the secterian appeal of the Hierarchy of Quebec. Canada has nothing to fear from French domination and those who are raising this dangerous cry are doing much to retard the progress and unity of Canada. The words of the famous French prelate, that "the last shot for British rule in America will be fired from the citadel of Quebec by a French Canadian" stands good to-day. Frenchmen know well that they are assured of greater freedom under the British flag than under the tri-color of La Belle France. The desire of the French Canadians to build up a French nationality on the banks of the St. Lawrence exists only in the imigination of chagrined and defeated Tory politicians. Under the guidance of the Hon. Wilfred Laurier and Sir Oliver Mowat Canada will develop into a homogeneous, prosperous and happy country.

A curious petition was presented to the House of Commons the other day. It is from an Indian, who describes himself as "one of the most miserable of Her Majesty's subjects." This petitioner does not want in any way to interfere with the legislation of Parliament. All he prays for is that Her Majesty's dutiful Commons "shall be pleased to subscribe one shilling each, which may be handed over to your humble petitioner."

A correspondent of the Boston Transcript says that Australia is a paradise for tramps. They comprise about one-quarter of the population, and spend their life in traveling from one little colony or "station," as it is called, to another. The name "sundowner" is applied to them for the reason that the sun's setting is a signal for their coming. The "stations" being so far apart—twenty or thirty miles, or even more—the people have not the heart to send them adrift in the bush, to go hungry for the night, and they are recognized as a necessary evil. The well-to-do farmers have usually a "travelers' hut," and regular rations are served out to these wayfarers, a pound of the inevitable mutton, a pannikin or dipper of flour, the water bag refilled and a bunk for the night.

Indeed! That's news! (I must make a note
Of all they say for some poet to quote).
"The young Lord April and Lady May
Met in the woods and kissed to-day.

"A mocking bird heard the kiss and made
A song just like it so it is said;
And listening to that tell tale bird
The sap in the oldest tree was stirred.

"The naked boughs into green leaves slipped—
The longing buds unto flowers tripped—
The little hills smiled as if they were glad,
The little rills ran as if they were mad.

"There was green on the earth and blue in the sky—
The chrysalis changed to a butterfly,
And our lovers, the honey-bees, all a-hum,
To hunt for our hearts began to come.

"All the woods are a-thrill with life and love,
From the proud old cock to the cooing dove,
And all because of that tell-tale bird,
Who set to music the kiss he heard."
—Outing.

Dishwashing Hints.

There are a few points about dishwashing which should always be kept in mind. Do not drop knives into hot water, as it injures the handles and removes the cement. Heavy glasses should not bed ropped in hot water. Thin glasses are less likely to break, and almost any glass may be saved from breaking if a teaspoon is placed in it before hot water is added.

A "Bain-Marie."

It is useless to attempt to serve dishes at the proper temperature without the aid of a "bain-marie." This is simply a large pan filled with hot water, into which the small pans and saucepans may be set to keep warm until they are wanted. An improvision of the bain-marie may be set up in any kitchen and will be found of great service.

The skirt is nearly six yards wide, has a deep hem, six to eight inches, and often the front is laid in a box plait that is shallow and seven inches wide at the top, then widens to twenty-four inches at the bottom, being pressed, not caught, into shape. Make the coat with bag seams, and have the sleeves amply full, though soft in effect. A lovely pink suit has the coat with a full godet back, and the fronts cut like an Eton, only slightly rounded on the front edge below the waist-line; the belt is over the back and under the fronts, and there are large revers and a small turned-over collar. A plastron of dotted white Swiss is worn, which extends to the side seams and has a lawn back hooked over. A double box-plait ornaments the centre front, down each edge of which are stitched two rows of narrow yellow Valenciennes lace; straight collar of Swiss, over which fall four points, each edged with two rows of lace. A band of number twelve Dresden ribbon, white figured with pink, is passed under the points, a dart being taken at the centre front, and tied in a short, full bow at the back. One of pale yellow is worn with a plastron and crush collar of cream Japanese silk figured with yellow Marguerites and pale blucts. A green suit takes on a Frenchy appearance from the pale violet silk plastron printed with green designs and the crush collar of five-inch ribbon tied in a square bow at the back, using a yard and a quarter of the ribbon. The very light tints of pique are worn with a turned-over collar of grass linen, with ribbon band and bow the color of the pique.

Ginghams are sold at from 10 to 75 cents a yard, and the occasions for their use are as varied as the prices. They are mixed with dots, tiny stripes, rings and small figures of silk, and show white and light-colored grounds, which afford the keynote of color for the ribbons, many of which are put upon these dainty and washable gowns. The shine or warp-printed ginghams at 50 cents really resemble silk in their figured and striped floral and Oriental designs. They are pretty for misses and ladies, and are to be worn for all except the very dressiest evening occasions during the summer. The useful plaid, striped and checked ginghams remain the favorite morning or home dresses.—Ladies' Home Journal.

The Use of Fruits.

Berries do not agree with many persons, because the seeds tend to forming irritating masses in the intestines. Grapes are one of the most complete of all foods. Most people can use bananas—always eaten as food, not as an extra. Oranges and lemons and grapefruits are invaluable, both as tonic and as food. Cherries are our best northern acid for summer; currants are almost as good. Every family should have a few currant bushes and a few sour cherry trees. Tomatoes are better than calomel, and should be used for the liver. Begin with pie-plant, and never be without vegetable acids all the year. Take care of your own apple supply before you look for a market.

Salt Water for the Complexion.

Salt water is invigorating at all seasons of the year, and salt water baths, which may easily be managed at home, are an excellent remedy for drooping spirits and tired frame, as well as a direct means of obtaining a clear, white skin.

CREDIT IN A FAMILY.

UNIQUE SYSTEM OF MANAGING THE CHILDREN.

What the Family Dressmaker Saw in One Home—The Great Contrast It Furnished to Most Others That She Worked in From Time to Time.

My business takes me into all sorts of homes, for I go out sewing by the day, but if there is one place I steer clear of, if it is a moral possibility, it is the house where there are children. Ten to one I go home every night from one of these homes with a racking headache, a temper all kinks and snarls, and a heartfelt thanksgiving that I'm an old maid with one quiet corner away from the rest of the noisy world. Yesterday, however, I found a home where I wouldn't be unwilling to sew all a lifetime. When this woman came and asked me to work two weeks for her she explained that she had six children who needed clothing made. That made me gasp. I was sewing then at a house where two urchins made my life a misery.

But I hadn't many engagements ahead so—I went, and before I left at night, I was wishing that home was mine. Yet they're what some folks would call poor, for the mother has to do all the work with only a 14-year-old girl to help. She's a rare manager, a rare governor, and the sweetest, sunniest-tempered creature above earth. I'll just tell you some of the schemes she has to bring up her little ones the delight they are instead of a torment. She doesn't possess a switch, a strap or a ruler, and I don't believe any of these youngsters understand what a spanking means. Mother to them is the dearest, lovingest, kindliest soul, somebody they take care of and try to please in every way. There is only one parlor in the house, the dining room was once the kitchen, with a clean tidy kitchen made out in the shed, while the best room in the house, a room that every other woman would have converted into a parlor, isn't fixed up with hair wreaths, glass shades and haircloth furniture, but it is just the children's room. The sunshine comes pouring in there. A warm, bright rag carpet covers the floor, and there's a wide, springy lounge made from a cot-bed and blue denim, bright pictures on the walls, and toys of every sort, most of them homemade. One thing I noticed is a slate and pencil hung by the mantel, which the mother tells me is her right hand aid in training her children. There are six names on it, painted over debit and credit spaces, and here's how it works:

ABOUT THE LIVER.

A lazy, slow or torpid liver influences the whole system, causing biliousness sick headache, sallow complexion, languor and dullness. Burdock Blood Bitters regulates the liver, purifies the secretions and cures all forms of liver troubles. We say so and here is the proof:

I hereby wish to thank you for the great benefit derived by me from your Burdock Blood Bitters. For three years I was troubled with liver complaint and tried everything to no purpose. I had almost given up hope until one day I determined to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I can now say that marked improvement resulted from the use of the first bottle and at the end of the sixth bottle I discontinued its use, being completely cured.

and here's how it works:

"Suppose," said the mother, "Margaret knows she has every morning to make her own bed and little Ellen's, and leave everything there quite tidy before going to school. If she does it without being reminded, she gets two credit marks; if she has to be told, she gets one; if told twice, none. For three reminders she gets a debtor mark. At the end of the week the children gather round as I make up the balance. Each credit mark means a cent, each debtor mark takes a cent off their account. Ten demerit marks mean some sort of punishment—being left at home from a ride, a picnic or a trip into town, for each Saturday I give them a treat of some sort for the afternoon, and you ought to see how they dread a debtor mark. The credit system is enlarged in all sorts of ways, by extra work, something done unusually well or for minding at the first telling. So they earn their own little stock of pennies, and then they think twice as much of it as if I gave it to them. I place no command on how it is to be spent, and it is never spent stealthily, for they know mother does not scold when Saturday night they tell her where it went. I buy foolish and extravagant things myself sometimes and if Jennie confesses that all her 10 cents went on chewing gum I remember my pretty new feather boa or father's occasional box of cigars. A New Shade Support.

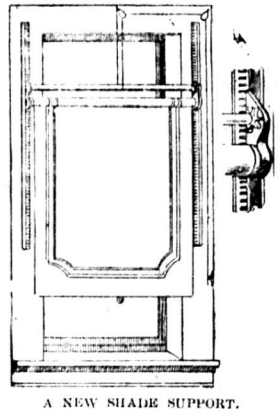
The shade-supporting device shown in the illustration is adapted to sustain a shade roller adjustably in position at any desired point on the window frame, thus making it convenient to admit light from the top of a window only when such arrangement of the shade is preferred. Rack bars, on which are vertical guideways, are secured to the side rails of the window frame, and in these guideways slide bearing blocks in which are journaled the ends of a transverse shaft, gears at the ends of the shaft engaging the rack bars.



A NEW SHADE SUPPORT.

One of the bearing blocks is shown in the small view, and these blocks, form a supporting frame in which is journaled the shade roller. The shade supporter is drawn up or lowered by means of a cord passed over pulleys at the top and one side, the end of the cord being secured to a retaining device at one side.

As the supporting frame and shade are raised or lowered they are guided by the engagement of the slide blocks and the teeth of the gears with the rack, the shade being unwound or wound to properly shade the window after the frame has been adjusted to the desired position. A slot in one of the slide blocks at one side permits the ready removal of the shade from its support. The shade cannot fall under any circumstances, the device is inexpensive and may be readily put up by anyone, and the shade is at all times held perfectly level.

Catarrh is a disgusting, offensive disease, disagreeable and often a cold and headache. It usually results from and death. The one effective remedy so far discovered for it is Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure.

Division Court Clerk Joel Rogers, Robert J. Hoover and Geo. Taylor, all of Beeton, voluntarily certify to the efficacy of Chase's Catarrh Cure.

J. W. Jennison, of Gilford, spent nearly $300 on doctors, but found no permanent relief until he tried a 25-cent box of Chase's.

GREEN BONES AS POULTRY FOOD.

An Excellent Article That Seems to Be Conclusive of Its Value.

Is green bone a profitable food with which to feed poultry? This is the question I want answered. We think it is, and our reasons are that hens fed on green bones will lay a larger percentage of eggs than they would if not fed the bone. A larger number of the eggs will be fertile; the chickens hatched will be hardier than chicks hatched from eggs laid by hens that were not fed green bones, especially if these are winter eggs or your fowls are confined in yards. Why so? Because the composition of bone contains nearly all the elements of an egg, which is proof positive. Here is bone analysis by Berzeline:

hard wood slat fastened to the board above by a swinging wire or iron hinge b. When closing the gate, the slat c strikes a catch a; the catch a forces the slat c back, but as its end is exactly opposite the cut in a, the weight of the slat c forces it forward into the cut of a, thus holding the gate in place. The slat a passes between boards to hold it in place as well as through the end upright. In the cut a is shown as the gate locks and the catch a reversed. The cut should be made sufficiently wide so the slate will drop easily into place before the gate can swing by and the slat drop. The catch a is rounded so the end of the slat c will slide up into place. Fig. 2 shows the catch piece doubled so the gate will swing in both directions and catch.—C. F. Swanson, in Farm and Home.

Drevenstedt says: "An egg is concentrated food weighing one and one-half ounces, composed of lime, soda, sulphur, iron, phosphorus, magnesia, oil and albumen, which are nearly all found in the composition of green bone. So if we feed the hen it we supply her with the proper materials with which to make eggs, for the hen is the mill, the crop is the hopper, the egg the grist. Every particle of the egg, yolk, albumen and shell, come from the assimilated food through the blood cells. If we feed fat and heat-forming foods there cannot follow the largest egg production." Whatever the appetite of a healthy hen craves is lacking in her food.

Fed two to three times a week, or just a very little each day, it certainly is a healthful, egg-producing, tissue-forming food, insuring rapid and great growth of chicks, and taking the place, in great measure, of the bug and insect meat fowls obtain in the natural state. It should not, understand, be forced upon them too largely, as confined fowls need coarse food, such as grass or clover as surely as they do grain and flesh, else looseness of bowels, torpid liver, indigestion and other evils must ensue.

Fowls running at large also need meat if they have but dry, grasshopperless, bugless, wormless feeding grounds. How does the chicken eat when given access to all kinds of food, at liberty? a bug or two, a few nips of green stuff, then a few kernels of grain, a sip of water now and then, and off it goes after an insect; now a scratch for one or two worms, and some seeds, a few more beakfuls of grass or weed, and it is off for a bath in the dusting place. The nearer the breeder can duplicate this natural, little-at-a-time varied manner of feeding, with his yarded fowls, so much the nearer will he come to realizing profit on his investment and pleasure for his pains.—Farm News.

Weaning the Chicks.

It is usually very desirable for a hen to wean chickens when about four weeks old. Hens usually carry chickens until seven or eight weeks old, but if a warm roosting place is provided, a chicken is sufficiently strong to leave the hen when four weeks old, and it is to the interest of the poultry raiser to get the hens to laying again as soon as possible. If a hen shows no sign of weaning her chickens when four weeks old, one can wean them very easily by keeping them away from the hen a few days. I have always found it advisable to let the hen wean her chickens herself, which she will invariably do when they are about four weeks old, if she is placed on the same diet as the laying hens, as soon as she hatches, for as a rule hens wean their chickens as soon as they go back to laying, and if one will give plenty of meat and other egg-producing food, hens will resume laying and wean their chickens within four weeks after they hatch, and sometimes earlier.

As soon as the chicks are weaned they should be watched very closely and not allowed to wander off in the early mornings, or sleep in filthy places at night, for they are more subjected to diseases—such as sore head and roup—as they grow older than when young. During the spring months small chickens can roost out in the open air in the south, but in the north where the atmosphere is very chilly it is best to have a small house, with a small stove, and all weaned chickens should be made to roost in it until the weather gets warm, when we think it best to let them roost out in the fresh air.—Farm and Home.

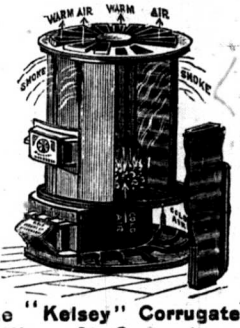
The Most Economical ...House Warmer



The "Kelsey" Corrugated Warm Air Generator.

Any ordinary Hot Air Furnace will produce heat if you will only supply enough fuel. The "Kelsey" has several special and valuable features but most important is that it will give more heat with less fuel and is the most durable heater made.

The "Kelsey" fire pot being constructed of several upright, tubular, corrugated, cast iron sections (see cut) around which the fire passes and up through which the cold air passes while being heated, and this entire section being wrapped with a heavy steel casing which becomes heated by the fire striking it when passing down outside of upright sections towards smoke pipe, it in turn warms the air that passes up between this steel casing and the galvanized iron casing, this explains why the "Kelsey" has three times more radiating surface and warm air capacity than an ordinary Furnace. The "Kelsey" heats every room evenly, wheresoever located, with a nice, mild, healthful warm air that will not injure your furniture.

The "Kelsey" will heat rooms 60 feet distant.

The "Kelsey" does not heat your cellar.

The "Kelsey" is absolutely gas and dust proof.

INJURIOUS INSECTS.

Entomologist James Fletcher of Ottawa on the June Varieties.

The month of June is not only the season when all vegetation seems to make a sudden rush forward to maturity, but also the month when insects of all kinds are most noticeable. The fruit grower and farmer must be at work early and late if he would successfully prevent injury to his crops by his insect enemies. Fruit trees must be sprayed with Bordeaux mixture and Paris green if fungous diseases and leaf-eating insects are to be kept in check.

Early in June, in most parts of Canada, the young emerge from beneath the old scales of the oyster shell bark-louse of the apple, and this injurious pest can be easily destroyed at that time if the trees be thoroughly sprayed with a kerosene emulsion wash made by diluting the ordinary stock emulsion with nine parts of water.

Spraying fruit trees is now so generally practised by progressive fruit growers that it is unnecessary to devote much space to pointing out the benefits of this operation. It has been shown by many experiments the extraordinary advantage which follows the spraying of apple trees with Paris green, 1 lb., fresh lime, 1 lb., and water, 200 gallons, to prevent injury by the codling moth. This spraying must be done within a few days after the blossoms fall. The same mixture sprayed over plum and peach trees prevents to a large measure injury by the plum curculio. Another pest of the apple orchard, which may be successfully treated by spraying with Paris green in June, is the canker-worm, the green or brown caterpillars of which sometimes strip whole orchards of almost every leaf, leaving the trees brown and sere as though scorched with fire.

The second brood of the imported currant worm appears during this month, and a close watch must be kept so as to treat the gooseberry and currant bushes with hellebore as soon as the caterpillars show themselves. For the first brood, which appears in May, Paris green may be used, but for the second brood, which comes when the fruit is almost full-grown, this poison is too dangerous, and hellebore must be used. This latter is a vegetable poison and soon loses its virulence when once wetted, either when applied in water or when moistened two or three times by the dew. The injury to currant bushes consequent on allowing them to be stripped of their leaves is not confined to the year when this injury is done, but bushes stripped one year only produce small and inferior fruit the following season.

In the vegetable garden the most troublesome June pests in all parts of the Dominion are certainly the many kinds of cutworms. These are dull-colored, smooth, greasy-looking caterpillars. The head is smooth and shining and sometimes of a different color from the rest of the body. They do their injuries at night time, and lie hid by day beneath the soil; frequently much harm has been done before [illegible] were observed. When [illegible] these caterpillars change to [illegible] the ground, and even- [illegible] ispicuously-colored [illegible] habits of most [illegible] are probably as fol- [illegible] s are laid by the female Woman's Realm.

MAKE THE HOME A BLESSING.

The Love of Children is Innate in the Heart of every True Man and Woman.

All that is beautiful and lovely in woman, finds its climax in motherhood. How often we find among our American women that longing for the prattling voice, the idol of their waiting hearts. It is a natural instinct, this yearning of the heart for offspring; yet the wife hesitates to talk with the family physician on this delicate subject. A good way to do is to send for "The People's Medical Adviser," 1000 pages, profusely illustrated (wood-cuts and colored plates). Sent for 31 cents in stamps, to prepay postage and duty only, if you address the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N.Y. The reflections of a married woman are not pleasant if she be delicate, rundown, or debilitated. She feels "played out." Her smile and her good spirits have taken flight. It worries her husband as well as herself.

This is the time to build up her strength and cure those weaknesses or ailments which are the cause of her trouble. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription regulates and promotes all the proper functions of womanhood, improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, melancholy and nervousness, brings refreshing sleep, and restores perfect health and strength.

It's a safe remedial agent, an invigorating tonic and nervine which cures all those disorders, weaknesses and derangements incident to womanhood.

ern Ontario. Several correspondents have sent in the dirty white or greenish white caterpillars, with accounts of their serious injuries to fields of oats barley and wheat. Last summer, too wide spread complaint was made of their injuries to corn. These caterpillars are about 1 1-2 inches long, of a dirty white color, with chestnut colored heads. They are most destructive to crops grown on sod, because the natural food being grasses, the eggs are laid by the female moths on the meadow grasses the previous year, where the young caterpillars will have a supply of food. Unfortunately, it is almost impossible to suggest any remedy short of plowing up the crop and sowing something else which can be put in later, such as Hungarian millet, buckwheat, or possibly late turnips. The moths from which the caterpillars which are doing so much harm this spring originated are beautifully marked creatures with soft tints of red and gray, which is well illustrated in the accompanying cut. They were so abundant last June and July that frequent letters of complaint were received. They swarmed into houses at night and made themselves obnoxious in many ways, getting into food and dirtying house linen and papers, flying into lamps, and giving great trouble to shop-keepers by requiring frequently to be swept out of the windows.—Dr. Fletcher, in the London Farmer's Advocate.

A STRANGE WORM.

As Yet Nameless, But Farmers' Grass Fields Are Being Destroyed.

If Professor Forbes, the State entomologist, does not come quickly, says the Chicago Tribune, to the rescue with some new-fangled insect powder potent to kill a new-fangled insect, there will not be left standing a blade of grass on farming lands in the southern half of Cook County. The hay crop on a majority of the farms in Worth, Homewood, Blue Island and the stretches that lie between will this year, to a great extent, be a failure.

On the farm of A. S. Piper, of Worth, 140 acres of the finest timothy grass have been eaten bare by the new pest. Frederick Holm of the same place, has had many acres eaten by the invading insects, and they are still at work, while the farmers can do nothing but stand still and see their property de-

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

EIGHTH INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION TO BE HELD IN BOSTON.

A Representative Body of Sunday School Workers of the Dominion of Canada and the United States—Recommendations of the Executive Committee.

The eighth International Sunday School convention, to be held in Boston on the 23rd, 24th, 25th and 26th of this month will be a representative body, comprising 2,684 delegates from the Sunday Schools of the United States and 212 from the Provinces of the Dominion of Canada, and will be entrusted with matters of interdenominational, national and international importance.

The new Tremont Temple (just completed, May 1), Rev. Dr. Lorimer pastor, will be the headquarters of the convention, where most of the meetings will be held, and where the various convention committees will have their headquarters at the time of the convention. This magnificent and modern church building has been constructed with special reference to just such a convention as this. It has several fine auditoriums, all under the same roof, with an aggregate seating capacity of over 5,000; numerous committee rooms; accommodations for light lunches, etc., all of which will be at the disposal of the convention. The main hall will be appropriately decorated, and an opportunity will be given for the display of state, provincial and territorial maps, if they are sent early enough for the committee to arrange them—a week before the opening of the convention.

Park Street Church, which is famous in the annals of Congregationalism, will be used for other meetings. It is on the opposite side of the street from the Tremont Temple, within a stone's throw.

The representation from Canada will be as follows: Alberta, 2 delegates; British Columbia, 5; Manitoba, 8; Newfoundland, 9; New Brunswick, 14; Nova Scotia, 18; Ontario, 86; Prince Edward Island, 11; Quebec, 59—total, 212.

The meetings will be as follows: The Lesson Committee will meet on Friday and Saturday, June 19 and 20, to select the lessons of 1899, and to complete their work; the Executive Committee will hold a prayer and conference meeting on Sunday afternoon, June 21, and will meet for business on Monday morning, June 22.

The convention will meet on Tuesday morning, June 23, in the Temple auditorium, and will hold three sessions each day in this hall. Two sessions each day (afternoon and evening) will be held in Lorimer Hall (in the Temple Building), and a session will be held each day at noon in Park Street Church, at which Mr. Moody will speak. If necessary, a third evening meeting will be held in Park Street Church.

The convention will review the work of the past three years, and will take action for the future. The principal recommendations of the Executive Committee will be as follows:

1.—That the field of the International Convention be extended to include all of North America, including Greenland, Cuba and the other West India Islands.

2.—That the field be divided into dis-

AN ABSOLUTE ANTIDOTE.

Men May Now Defy the Poisonous Reptiles Here Pictured.

For the past five years Dr. Calmette of the Pasteur Institute in Paris has been officially studying for the victims of the serpent even more than Pasteur has done for those bitten by the mad dog. The investigations have led to the discovery of a new anti-venomous serum, an absolute antidote to the poison of any snake. He has also made clear the way in which both venom and serum act upon the system. The new anti-venom acts by neutralizing the poison which has been introduced into the system. The serum is absorbed into the system just as rapidly as the snake venom, and unless paralysis has already set in, will render the poison entirely harmless. Its action is exactly like that of antitoxin in diphtheria, and the serum is procured in a similar way. The blood of a horse which has gradually been accustomed to doses of venom becomes laden with great quantities of the antitoxin of snake poison. A dose of venom sufficient to kill four hundred horses can be supported by such an animal without any ill effects, and the serum from its blood is an absolute antidote to the poison of any venomous snake.

RATTLESNAKE. North America

Many more deaths occur from snake bites than is usually supposed. The deadly cobra of India alone kills annually more than 20,000 people. These are the figures gathered by statisticians, and the unreported deaths would

...s are laid by the female ...mn or later summer, ...g caterpillars hatch and ...e of their growth in the au... They pass the winter in a torpid condition, and are ready to attack any young vegetation as soon as it starts in spring. There are many kinds of cutworms, and these differ somewhat in their habits; but most of those which come prominently before the farmer and gardener come out from their hiding-places by day and cut off young plants just at the surface of the ground, and then, burrowing a short distance into the soil, devour the cut-off plant at their leisure. There are two remedies which may be successfully used against those which work in this way. One is to wrap a piece of paper around the stem of young plants when putting them out in spring so as to leave a collar an inch above the ground when the plant is set. For tomatoes and cabbages old tomato cans with the tops and bottoms melted ot form a perfectly impenetrable barrier to all cutworms. The second plan referred to is known as "poison traps," and this plan is very popular with all who have tried it. It consists of tying up bundles of weeds, grass, clover or any other succulent vegetation, and, having dipped the bundles in a strong mixture of Paris green and water, placing them about at intervals on the infested ground. The cutworms are attracted to them to feed or for shelter, and large numbers are thus easily destroyed. A plan of a similar nature has lately been adopted with good results. It consists of mixing enough Paris green with bran to give it a greenish tinge and then moistening it with enough water to make it adhere slightly. A little of this mixture (about a teaspoonful) is put at short distances along rows of beets or other plants, and is claimed to be very attractive to all kinds of cutworms. It has been used at the base of orchard trees for climbing cutworms, as well as in gardens for the ordinary varieties.

There is a class of cutworms which have rather different habits from the above, because they spend the greater part of their time in the soil, feeding on the roots of grasses, and are sometimes very destructive to the small grains. One of these has attracted a great deal of attention lately in West-

CONCLUSIVE PROOF.

From a Well Known Citizen.

"My daughter Polly, has for more than a year been troubled with severe symptoms of kidney disease. She had constant and acute pains in her back. The pain in her head was fearful and almost unendurable. It frequently prevented her from attending school, and she found study at home practically impossible. She had no appetite, and did not sleep well. The pain was very severe around her heart and she was much troubled with fluttering and palpitation. She was completely worn out in body and was tired and drowsy all the time. Her mother and myself became seriously alarmed as she was constantly getting worse.

"Last July my daughter Sarah, a teacher in the Public School at Kingsville, Ont., came home to spend her vacation, and finding her sister in such a distressing and dangerous condition, said, I am taking Doan's Kidney Pills and they are doing me much good, I have a box with me and will divide with Polly, which she did. By the time Polly had finished the half box her improvement in health was so marked, that I procured more from Mr. Fraleigh's drug store.

Her full restoration to health and spirits was rapid and continuous. She has now none of her former dangerous, painful and distressing kidney troubles. She eats and sleeps well, and for more than a month has enjoyed the most vigorous health. She has not lost a day at school since she commenced taking the pills, and has so much faith in them since they restored her to full health that she wants me to keep six boxes in the house all the time, in case they should be needed and not available. Her cure has been so wonderful she thinks they will cure any complaint. If the pills had cost $10.00 a box, I would not have begrudged the money. The restoration of my daughter to full health and strong girlhood, from her former serious illness, etc., has made her mother, myself and daughter a happy family.

"I make this sworn statement with the full approbation of my wife and daughter, voluntarily and without any urging or inducement whatever, to show the gratitude my daughter, wife and myself feel for the wonderful cure wrought by the Doan Kidney Pills. We have not the least doubt that her trying the pills just at the time she did saved us a large doctor's bill, as she was all but sick abed at the time. I am sixty-two years of age, a carpenter by trade, have been a resident of St. Mary's for forty years, and county constable for thirty years and am well known, and I make this solemn declaration believing the same to be true, and knowing the same to have the same effect as an oath, and according to the Act respecting extra Judicial Oaths 1893.

The creature which is doing all the damage is a little more than an inch long. It is a worm in shape, its body being pointed. It has longitudinal stripes of light brown and dark brown, the darker stripes being double the width of the others. The front of the head is ginger-colored. It looks much like the cut-worm, excepting that it is darker in shade and is not as thick as the other pest.

Farmers of the infected townships met the other day and discussed the situation, but they could find no name for the devourer, nor could they devise any means for its destruction. They were all agreed it was not a cut-worm.

John Holm said yesterday he had driven all over the country lying about Worth, Homewood and Blue Island, and everywhere the worm had leveled the growing grass.

"We don't know what to do about it," he said. "It has never been seen here before. The hay crop is doomed. The creature prefers timothy to any other kind. In a field which has timothy, orchard and lawn grasses mixed the insects have just begun their work. For several yards the timothy is eaten, while the other grasses are left untouched, though the creatures will begin over again eventually and eat the inferior growth. The loss amounts to thousands of dollars already, and I see nothing ahead but the total destruction of the crop.

"The common cut-worm does its work at the roots of the grass, while this insect bites the blades off about one inch from the ground."

The Strawberry-Raspberry.

The strawberry-raspberry is a remarkable fruit, which like many novel and valuable fruits, comes from Japan

JAPANESE STRAWBERRY-RASPBERRY

It is said to be a hybrid between the strawberry and raspberry. By the habit of the plant, a reproduction of which was taken from a plant in bearing, it will be seen its habit is that of neither the fruits named, but a compromise of the two: it being a spreading, low growing bush, producing its fruit in branching clusters of three or more at the ends of the stems. In form and appearance of fruit it is about as good a combination of a strawberry and red raspberry as one could well imagine—in size about midway between the two and the form of neither, but half-way between each, being formed of globules or drupes resembling a raspberry, but in color a crimson equalling in brilliancy the most beautiful strawberry. It is said to be entirely hardy.—Farm and Home.

3—That the superintendent of the work of organization among the colored people shall have one assistant now, and two assistants when needed, provided the necessary funds are secured.

4.—That a general secretary shall be chosen, and a secretary to the chairman of the Executive Committee be appointed, whose whole time shall be given to the work.

5.—That a Finance Committee be appointed, consisting of well-known business men, permission being given to select some persons who are not members of the Executive Committee, if desired.

6.—That the amount to be contributed by states, provinces and territories be placed at $12,000 per annum for three years, and that an effort be made to secure an additional amount of at least $12,000 per annum for three years by idividual subscriptions, the committee believing that $25,000 per annum is needed for this work.

7.—That the Ninth International Convention, to be held in 1899, be held in the South, provided an invitation is received from a city with suitable accommodations for the meetings, and located where there are sufficient railroad facilities.

8.—That the annual meeting of the Executive Committee, held in each of the years except the convention year, is of sufficient importance to demand the attendance of the members, and that the states, provinces and territories be requested to make provision for their expenses whenever it is necessary to secure their attendance.

9.—That arrangements be made to secure, if possible, a large delegation from the United States and Canada to the World's Third Convention, to be held in or near London, England, July 6-11, 1897.

In addition to the recommendations of the committee, one other matter of great importance will attract attention. We shall at this meeting elect the fifth Lesson Committee, to serve in place of the present committee, and to select the lessons for the years 1900-1905.

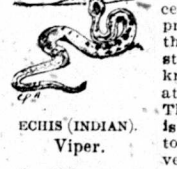
clans, and the unreported deaths would probably swell the total very greatly. In colder climates, where people wear thicker clothes, and the snakes are not so deadly, deaths from snake bites are comparatively rare. They are, however, numerous enough to make an absolute antidote very welcome. Europe possesses fewer poisonous snakes than any other continent, yet the yearly total of deaths caused by serpents is quite large even there. In two departments of France 321 people were bitten by snakes in a period of five years, sixty-two cases being fatal.

FER DE LANCE.
Brazil.

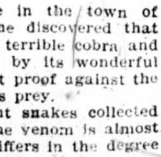
Dr. Calmette is sending his anti-venom all over the world to be distributed among physicians. The Pasteur Institute in Chicago will be the distributing point for the United States. There is no known chemical which by injection into the system can be depended upon to nullify the effects of snake venom. Chloride of lime and chloride of gold are the most efficacious, but their action is very uncertain. If over half an hour has elapsed after the bite they are always useless. The anti-venomous serum will neutralize the poison two hours after the bite, and in the case of the less poisonous snakes after a much longer interval.

For many years scientists have been trying to find out the exact chemical nature of snake poison. So far they have been unsuccessful. It has been proved to consist of three distinct substances, but nobody knows very accurately what they are. The first substance is said to be peptone, which has a very slow action and produces ulceration locally. The second is some virulent matter which causes great infiltration of blood when injected into the tissues; the third is of an albuminous nature, and is not apparently poisonous in itself. Boiling heat destroys the poisonous qualities of snake venom. When concentrated by removing the albumen and retaining the salts, the residuum is forty times more poisonous than the normal venom. It is then the most powerful poison known, and enough of it could be put into a thimble to kill 25,000 people.



ECHIS (INDIAN).
Viper.

The only living creatures known which are proof against snake poison are snakes themselves. Pigs possess great power of resistance to the poison, and so does the mongoose of India, which feeds upon venomous snakes. A mongoose, though not so big as a rabbit, will only succumb to a dose of poison large enough to kill eight rabbits. Dr. Chalmette had six mongooses at his little menagerie in the town of Lille, France, and he discovered that the animal kills the terrible cobra and escapes injury only by its wonderful quickness, and is not proof against the bite of its dangerous prey.



HAJE (AFRICAN).
Cobra.

Of all the different snakes collected by Dr. Chalmette the venom is almost identical. It only differs in the degree of virulence, the venom being more diluted in some snakes than in others. Thus only one antidote is required for all snake bites, but the amount injected must vary with the intensity of the venom of the snake and the quantity infused in the wound. A dose which would destroy the venom of a rattlesnake would be too weak for a cobra and some of the deadly snakes of tropical countries.

Local Customs.

The late Sir John A. Macdonald was once at a reception, and a bishop from Belgium was present. As the party was being escorted by a body of men in Highland costume, the foreign bishop, seeing the bare legs and kilts, asked why these men were without trousers. "It is just a local custom," gravely replied Sir John. "In some places people take off their hats as a mark of honor to distinguished guests; here they take off their trousers."

The Bay of Quinte employees excursion to Watertown on Thursday of last week was well patronized and proved a highly enjoyable affair. Quite a number from Napanee took in the trip. At this point five passenger coaches conveyed the excursionists to Watertown where they arrived at 1:40 p.m. The excursion left Watertown at 5 p.m., after a pleasant outing in the Garland City.

Seriously Injured.

Mrs. Shirley, who left Napanee recently for Chicago, was struck by a cable car on the 23rd inst, and frightfully injurod. Mrs. Webster received a letter from Miss Shirley on Monday giving particulars of the accident and an account of the injuries sustained by her mother. It appears Mrs. Shirley while dismounting from a cable car was caught by another car and carried about 30 feet. Her collar bone was broken, both ankles were sprained and her forehead was so badly cut that the doctors in attendance found it necessary to take a number of stitches in the wound. The old lady's hands were terrible torn also and it is feared she is injured internally. Mrs. Shirley is about seventy years of age and the accident will no doubt cripple her for life. The accident was due to the culpable negligence of the car driver, who neglected to ring the alarm while passing the car which Mrs, Shirley had taken. Mrs. Shirley and her daughter left here a few days ago to visit Mrs. Walker, of Chicago. It was Miss Shirley's intention to take a trip out to the Pacific Coast, but

Good News Travels as Fast as Bad.

News spreads quickly, and when a good thing is found its merits are soon learned by every one far or near. This accounts for the fast growing popularity of Fibre Chamois as an interlining which makes outdoor work possible in any weather. The first man who realized its wind and rain proof warmth quickly told his friends so that they too might enjoy this inexpensive comfort. It might seem impossible that this fabric so light in weight and without bulk should furnish so much healthful warmth; but when you realize that its merit lies in being a complete non-conductor of heat or cold, you understand why a layer of it through your clothing gives such warmth—it not only keeps out all cold but keeps in the natural heat of the body.

Wedding Bells Again.

Another very pretty wedding was celebrated on Tuesday morning last at 9:30 in St. Patricks R. C. Church, by the Rev. Father Hogan. The contracting parties were Miss Jervel Conroy, one of Napanee's best known and popular young ladies and Mr. Harold R. Colton, of Pembroke. The bride looked charming in a gown of French material of blue and gold, and a large picture hat of which Chiffon and white tips caught up with pretty French roses. The groom was supported by his brother, Mr. P. H. Colton, of Pembroke and the bride was assisted by Miss Nellie Whelan, cousin of the bride, who was also handsomely attired in lovely pale blue silk and looked charming. After the ceremony the wedding party drove to the home of the bride's father on Bridge st. where a sumptuous breakfast was partaken of after which the happy couple took the noonday train amidst showers of rice for Montreal and points east and will take up their residence in Pembroke on their return. The presents were numerous and costly.

His Annual Visit.

"Old Sandy Johnston" floated in upon us last Friday. It is now well on to eight months since "Sandy" lightened our sanctum with his presence and regaled us with the tale of his misfortunes and meanderings. Time has wrought a few changes in Sandy since his last visit, and we regret to say they are not for the better. He is still the "poor unfortunate" who has been reduced to dire extremity through no fault of his own. The failure of a large printing office in Toronto last week, unchronicled by the daily press owing to the pressure of election of matter, forced him to again take to the road. All his surplus hard earned cash was held in trust by the foreman of the office and when the crash came poor Sandy was forced to pawn his evening suit, tooth pick shoes and beaver, and attire himself in an abbreviated overcoat, baggy kneed trousers, and a slouch hat a triffle the worse for wear. Whiskey, "Sandy" assured us, had nothing to do with his present misfortune and his breath and the rubicundity of his organ of smell bore ocular evidence to the truth of the statement. "Sandy's" whiskers are still with although lack of trimming, and the wild winds have played sad havoc with them. It was early morn when "Sandy" struck our office and by evening he had bid adieu to his temperance vows and principles and had journeyed perilously near the border of inebriety. He visited the other offices

THE CIRCUIT RACES A HUGE SUCCESS.

Large attendance and a well satisfied crowd—A good Game of Base Ball.—The Picton Band furnished excellent music.

First Day.

Canada's natal day was fittingly celebrated in Napanee on Wednesday, and the demonstration will go down as one of the most successful in the history of the Napanee Driving Park. Excursion trains brought in large crowds from neighboring points on the G.T.R. and B. of Q. Railways, and the steamers "Ella Rose," "Nellie Gathbert," "Verona," "Deseronto" and "Reindeer" brought in their full quota of excursionists from points along the bay. The Picton Band ran an excursion from that town and enlivened the proceedings throughout the day with numerous excellent musical selections. A large number drove in from nearby places and by 12 o'clock the town was all agog with people.

The energetic committee, H. G. Milling, G. Bogart, G. H. Williams and J. L. Boyes are deserving of great credit for the excellent manner in which the demonstration was managed. Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. Thos. E. Anderson, the indefatigable secretary, for his share in the work, and altogether the Napanee Driving Park Association has just reason to congratulate itself on the success that attended its efforts.

The Demonstration was held on the beautiful grounds of the Napanee Driving Park, of which there is none superior and few to equal it in the Province of Ontario. It possesses a half-mile track that is conceded to be the fastest in Eastern Ontario and its shade trees and situation cannot be surpassed.

The races marked the opening of the Midland Trotting Circuit and were close and exciting throughout. The 2.27 race was the tamest of the lot, there being but three horses entered and "Furioso" proved an easy winner.

The 2.50 race was a dandy and it was nip and tuck between J H B and Kitty Carver for the second place in the second heat, but in the third J H B brought up the tail end of the procession. Nellie P is a speedy mare but seems unable to hold her feet. Indirect was distanced in the first heat, but as the winner of the heat was a protested horse he was allowed to start in the second. "St John," the winner of the race, is a ringer it is claimed. One man, who appeared to know, asserted that "St John" has a record of 2.16 and as he was prepared to back up this assertion with the "long green" there were none to say him nay.

The ½ mile running race proved a surprise to our local sports, who backed "Tom Nye" heavy to win. He put up a game fght for first but Livery Boy proved too speedy for him. He got a bad start in the second or otherwise he might have won the heat. He didn't win however and quite a number of our local sports went broke in consequence.

The ½ mile running race was a good one and "Abe" the darkey, whose shining "mug" was so long a familiar adjunct of the Royal Hotel stable carried Prince Charlie to victory with a considerable margin to the good. "Abe" might have been a good jockey once upon a time but we feel inclined to give Stewart's speedy colt all the credit for winning Wednesday's race. Dr. D 1. Dulmage, of Belleville acted as starter to the entire satisfaction of all. The following is a summary of Wednesday's races:—

The Royal Templars of Temperance moonlight excursion per Steamer Merritt on Monday evening proved a highly enjoyable and successful affair. The night was a trifle chilly and this no doubt kept quite a number from attending. A goodly number boarded the boat at Deseronto and swelled the receipts so that it proved a paying venture for the Templars. At Glenora dancing was indulged in, the music being furnished by Vance's orchestra. The excursion arrived home about 3 o'clock on Tuesday morning.

Bell's Majority 87.

Addington is a large constituency and a difficult one to secure returns from and it was not until Tuesday that the exact result was known. On Tuesday afternoon the two candidates, Messrs. Dawson and Bell, and their friends congregated in the office of Mr. W. G. Majority for Bell, 87.

By the defeat of Mr. Dawson Addington loses an able representative and parliament a useful member. During his term in the House he forged rapidly to the front and was prominent in the councils of his party. He was defeated but he has the consolation of knowing that he fell fighting in a good cause and one that triumphed at the poll.

He prefaced his leave taking with a modest request for a couple of dimes, and as we did not reciprocate our parting was not of a cordial nature. Napanee District Convention

The District Convention of the Woman's Missionary Society was held in the Western Methodist church, Napanee, on Thursday, June 18th. The morning session opened at 10 o'clock, Mrs. Gibson, district organizer, presiding. Mrs. Edwards conducted the scripture reading and prayer, after which Mrs. Platt, branch secretary, was introduced. The reports from Auxiliaries, Circles and Bands were very gratifying. A talk on "Difficulties of Auxiliary Work" by Mrs. A. C. Parks, was followed by a paper from Mrs. Detlor, of Hawley, on "The benefits of regular attendence." Mrs. (Rev.) Crossley led the consecration service and many testimonies were given of the benefits derived from belonging to the W. M.S. The meeting adjourned to meet at 2 o'clock. The afternoon session opened with devotional exercises led by Mrs. Casey. A paper was read by Mrs. Edwards on the "Watch Tower." Then came a paper on "Personal responsibility" by Miss McCullough. An address by Miss Smith, Odessa, on "Do our offerings represent self-denial," and a paper by Mrs. Valleau, "Is our Auxiliary work done at the expense of other church work," both merit special mention. A greeting from the Presbyterian Auxiliary was given by Mrs. (Rev.) Peck, showing the spirit of harmony and oneness of purpose in the work of Missions Mrs. Hawley, Bath, read a paper on "The work of Mission Circles and Bands." Miss Fralger, Picton, gave an address to the "girls" on "Missionary work" and the importance of beginning in girlhood, which is a great stimulus to active Mission work. The Easter service on "systematic giving" was read, and Mrs. Platt made it quite clear that "tithing" is the scriptural mode of giving. It was decided by vote that the secretaries bring the matter before each Auxiliary and find how many are in favor of that syetem. The meeting was interspersed throughout with good music. After singing "God be with you till we meet again" the convention was brought to a close.

That the electors of Addington voted against their own best interest in defeating G. W. Dawson they will be free to admit now that the elections are over and a Liberal administration returned to power. In Mr. Dawson they had a representative who was a credit to the riding and one who was looked upon as a coming man. Many honest men, who allowed themselves to be carried away by the race and religious cries raised against Mr. Dawson through his leader will regret their notes to-day. All the influence of the P.P.A. and Orange organizations was used against Mr. Dawson and in support of a man who acknowledged as his leader the arch boodler and coercionists, Sir Charles Tupper. The cry "don't vote for a French Roman Catholic for premier" did yoeman service for Bell, and there is plenty of evidence that money induced many a wavering voter to mark his ballot for Bell. Mr. Dawson made a plucky fight and conducted a clean and honest campaign, and the fact that he kept Bell's boasted majority or 500 down to 87 speaks volumes for his ability. Mr. Dawson stands higher in the estimation of the electors of Addington to day than ever before.

The base ball match between the Granites of Kingston and the Belleville base ball club was a good exhibition of the game. Belleville lost the match by putting Thompson in the box for the first two innings. He proved an easy mark and was batted freely. Kingston piled up 3 runs in the first and 4 in the second of his delivery. In the third he was sent to right field and Tuttle took his place. He proved a puzzle to the Kingston men who could not connect with his curves worth a cent. The Granites only succeeded in making one run off Tuttle, and that one was by an error in fielding. Sullivan, the Kingston pitcher, was hit pretty freely, but received excellent support in the field, and Belleville only succeeded in making 6 runs off his delivery. Belleville has a number of "dubs" in the field who are neither ornamental or useful. They have several men who might possibly stop a ball providing it was coming their way and hit them, but as a general rule they were successful in evading the sphere. Crewes, Belleville's catcher, is a "peach" of a player and put up an errorless game. The fielding of the Belleville team was ragged throughout and Chickey McRae, at third base, was a shining example of "how not to do it." The following is the score by innings:

Belleville	0 0 0 1 1 0 1 2 1—6
Kingston	3 4 0 0 0 1 0 0 x—8

NOTES.

The attendance at the races on Wednesday while not so large as at farmer demonstrations way away above the average, and very large considering the counter attractions in Tweed and Belleville.

Drunks were conspicuous by their absence, and although there were a few who celebrated too much for their own good they had "horse sense" enough to prevent them from making an exhibition of themselves.

Notwithstanding the fact that two young men in town paid $15 for the exclusive privilege of selling score cards for the races the Star printing office, though well aware of this fact, got out score cards and hawked them around town. The enterprising aspirant for Parliamentary honors even wanted to distribute his score cards on the grounds, but of course was promptly and deservedly "sat upon." The racing committee will take steps to prevent a recurrence of the like at future races. When the "Independent Candidate" found he could not sell his score cards he authorized his agents to give them away.

Several lively "scraps" occured during the day but on the whole the crowd was a very orderly one.

Picton has just reasons to feel proud of her excellent musical organization, the Citizens Brass Band.

The "Nyes" are humorous "cusses" but when "Tom Nye" failed to cross the tape first the sports took the joke unkindly.

The bookmakers did not do a very thriving busines but what little they did do came their way pretty well.

The refreshment booths on the grounds did a thriving business. Truly 'tis better to run a soft drink booth at the Park than an ice cream parlor down town.

It requires a fine sense of discrimination to pick out the winning horse. Some "straight tips" are a delusion and a snare.

The rule of distraints for taxes recently made legal by the Ontario Assembly are much more just than the old ones. Under the old law the municipality could seize effects on the premises in question, no matter whether belonging to a tenant in possession when the taxes were levied, or to a tenant who had moved in, in ignorance of the fact that the landlord had not paid the taxes. The new law provides that the municipality cannot levy upon the goods of a tenant coming into a house after taxes are in default, and only upon the goods of a tenant in possession when taxes fall due, to the amount that such tenants may owe. Its operation will relieve tenants who innocently rent premises, of the taxes which are in arrears, from being sold out by the tax collectors for other people's debts.

Simple Precautions Insure Complete Victory.

A Child Can Use Diamond Dyes Successfully.

When using the world-famed Diamond Dyes for home dyeing, use fresh, clean, soft water; hard and impure water will mar the beauty of the shades. Wooden, earthen or enambled vessels are best.

Old articles before dyeing should be well washed with soap and water to remove dirt or grease, and rinsed in hot water, and dyed while damp. When any particular shade is wanted, the dye should be tested by dyeing a small piece of the stuff.

If these few precautions are observed you will be able to produce richer, brighter and more lasting colors than any steam dyeing house can give you. Be sure your dealer gives you the Diamond Dyes; they are the only warranted dyes in the world.

All the Others in the Wrong.

Colonel Page, who commanded a Pennsylvania regiment in the civil war, often used to tell laughingly his first experiences in marching the raw men who had enlisted for the war of the rebellion. He was given command of a company, and, after some preparatory drill, led them down a street in Philadelphia. They marched as well as could be expected for several blocks, when suddenly from the ranks rang out a loud, "Halt!"

The men wavered, and then came to a full stop.

"Who gave that order?" thundered the enraged Captain.

"Potts, sir! Potts," a dozen voices called, and every eye turned on Potts, a stout German, a butcher by trade.

"What do you mean, sir, by giving that order?" demanded the Captain.

"Well, sir, I've been trying for two blocks to get this company to keep step with me, and they wouldn't do it. So I stopped them to begin all over again."

Colonel Page's anecdote suggests the story of the old Scotchwoman who called on her minister to say that she and her brother John had decided that all the members of the Scottish kirk believed false doctrine, and would be lost, and that John and she would in future worship at home by themselves.

"I am very glad," said the minister drily, "that there are two of you who are right and will be saved."

An Impecunious Rothschild.

Baron Rothschild was once caught in a predicament that many people experience daily, and that is getting into a conveyance of some kind, and then not having the money to pay the fare. The driver of the amnibus into which Rothschild entered demanded his fare, and the Baron, feeling in his pockets, discovered that he had no change. The driver was very angry. "What did you get in for, if you had no money?"

"I am Baron Rothschild," exclaimed the great capitalist, "and there is my card."

The driver scornfully tossed the card away. "Never heard of you before," said he, "and don't want to hear of you again. What I want is your fare."

The banker was in great haste. "Look here. I've an order for a million," he said; "give me the change." And he proffered a coupon for that amount.

The driver stared and the passengers laughed. Fortunately a friend of the Baron entered the omnibus at the moment, and taking in the situation, immediately paid the fare. The driver, realizing his mistake, and feeling remorseful, said to the Baron."

Elizabeth Ruttan, wife of the late Samuel Osborne, of Fish Lake, Prince Edward, passed away of pneumonia on Friday last, aged 70 years. Deceased was a sister of Dr. Ruttan, of Napanee, and leaves one son and three daughters to mourn her loss.

"To remove the fire and relieve the pain of a burn," says an exchange, "soak at once in cold water in which plenty of soda has been dissolved" Are we to understand, then, that the old plain of hopping around on one foot and emphasizing your remarks has ceased to be efficacious?

The funeral of the late Luella Warner Finkle took place from her mother's residence Centre Street to the Newburgh cemetery on Saturday. Much sympathy is expressed for the bereaved mother and relatives. Deceased was twelve years of age and a particularly bright and amiable child. Her death was due to malarial fever.

Willie Curl, aged about seven years, was taken to the Kingston Hospital on Thursday of last week suffering with rheumatism. The little fellow died shortly after his arrival. His remains were sent to Napanee on Saturday. A collection was taken up to defray the expenses of interment and he was laid to rest in the Napanee cemetery on Sunday. The boy's mother is in the Kingston insane asylum, and this, together with other circumstances surrounding his death, makes the case a particularly sad one.

A MODERN PROBLEM.

She—You have never met father and mother, have you?

"Not formally, but we have just passed one of them, I think."

"Which one?"

"I don't know."

A Difficult Question.

"Now," said the prudent man, "you have drawn up my will to the best of your ability?"

"Yes, sir," replied the lawyer. "I've done it just as carefully as I know how."

"And it's properly signed and witnessed and all that?"

"Everything is quite regular."

"Well, there is just one more thing I wish you'd do for me. It's largely a matter of curiosity."

"What is it?"

"I wish you'd tell me who, in your opinion, is most likely to get the money when the lawsuit is over."

Several cases of eggs were exposed on South Water street Tuesday morning. By noon they were all hard boiled.

One of Napoleon's Grand Army.

We were in error, it seems, when we spoke a short time since of Joseph Rose as the sole survivor of the "grand armee." Out of the 44,000 grizzled warriors who claimed in 1869 the St. Helena medal as having served under "Le Petit Caporal," there still remains one to answer to the muster call, Victor Baillod of Percy, in the Yonne, is a year senior to his departed comrade, having been born on April 9, 1793. He joined the ranks in 1812 at Colmer, and formed part of the 105th Foot under Davoust, with whom he went through the siege of Hamburg. Baillod was without doubt a Waterloo hero, and he has good reason to remember that eventful day, for he fell under the charge of the British cavalry, got a saber cut across the skull, which would probably have cut short his career but for his huge shako, and was carried off to England as a prisoner of war. His name found a place among the list of dead, but a year later he returned to the bosom of his family, and a medical board gave him his discharge on the ground that he was in the last stages of consumption. Since that date he has lingered on through eighty summers, and hopes to see the century before he bids farewell to the world.—London Chronicle.

ODESSA.

After an illness of a couple of weeks Mrs. Benjamin Davy passed away on Tuesday of last week. She was the second wife of Mr. Davy and had been married only since November last, and had moved from Link's Mills to this place. Mrs. Davy's maiden name was Alice Lockwood, and she had lived for many years in the family of Frank Amey. She was a consistent member of the Methodist church and was an interested member of one of the home department classes in connection with the Sabbath school here. She was a very industrious woman and a devoted wife, and had the respect of all who knew her. Mr. Davy has a family of six who found in their stepmother a real mother and they have the sympathy of all in their sad bereavement. The funeral conducted by Rev. Mr. Seccombe, occurred on Thursday to the Union church at which deceased had worshipped for many years. The coffin was covered with flowers, the gifts of friends, the home department of the Sabbath school sending a beautiful wreath and a star made by Mrs. A. Storms.

A second funeral occurred in the village on Sunday afternoon last. Mrs. Bertram, who had died in Kingston, was brought to the house of her father, John Babcock, from which Rev. Mr. Dibb conducted the funeral services to St. Alban's church. The church was filled with mourners and friends. The sermon was preached from Hebrew xi, 39-40. The remains were interred at Wilton.

The quarterly services at the Methodist church here were largely attended on Sunday last. Dr. Metzler will occupy the pulpit of this church on Sabbath morning next.

CAMP HAZELDELL.

Dear EXPRESS,—The weather of late has been rather sultry to say the least, but the showers have been very refreshing.

Daddy Borland has kept up his reputation as angler, having caught the first pike of the season trolling.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon and family, from Napanee, favored us with a flying visit, took a meal, had a sail, and no doubt slept the sleep of the just.

On Sunday, Mrs. Alcombrack and sons, Mrs. Goodwin and son, Miss Mellow, Mr. John Mellow and Mr. Card took our boats for Hudson Park to hear a sermon preached, but they did not seem much elated over it. We do not have preaching at Camp Hazeldell, but prefer to spend the day without noise, have a little song, etc., and retire early—we did not come here to attract attention.

A great many boats, both steam and sail, pass and repass here on Sunday's. For a christian community it does not look very well. We do not want to follow in the footsteps of our American cousins. They seem to have their base ball matches and all their pleasuring on that day—they need missionaries at home for their own people instead of the "heathen Chinee." Our people are following them without much coaxing.

Regattas seem to be all the rage at present. Our fellows from Ontario showed up well at the Halifax regretta, coming in first, acquitting themselves A1. The rural city of Belleville, after years of talking over a summer carnival, have concluded to have a regretta next week. I hope there will be no squealing as in the last, but everything go off smoothly.

Took a drive to Gosport, saw James Jaynes, Esq. He showed us over his ranch. His crops are magnificient, very heavy. Wheat and oats the best I have seen for many years. He seems to be a good farmer. All is in apple pie order. Wherever I have been the crops are good. The late rains have done wonders. I hope the farmer's heart will rejoice. His wallet well filled with good Canadian bills, not (American silver.) The gold fever is on at Kootenay, B.C. They have struck it rich there. Gentlemen, Canada to the front. What with gold mines richer than Eldorado, good crops, a good Grit government. Mr. Editor, we will have to keep our heads level and not get off our base.

Yours,

J. H. PHILIP.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY AUG. 7, 1896.

THE Liberals have protested 11 seats in Ontario. The Conservatives did not lodge a single protest.

MR. Tarte has already discharged over 200 men from the Public Works Department and the Civil Service staff will be reduced all along the line. The departments of the Civil Service are crowded with useless employees who have waxed fat at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada. The reductions cannot be made too soon.

THE Democrats of the United States are between the devil and the deep sea at present. They have to choose between two evils Protection or Free Silver and repudiation. Speaking on this subject and the growth of socialism which has made silver an issue Prof. Goldwin Smith says: "The feature of American policy to which, if to any, the growth of Socialistic tendencies may be ascribed, is protectionism, which has taught the people to look to legislation for their bread, instead of looking to themselves. Paternalism, of which protectionism is a species, and Socialism are at bottom the same thing, under different names, though worked in opposite interests by different hands." Speaking of the choice before the people, Protection vs. Free Silver the same writer says: "An intelligent citizen, however opposed to protectionism, cannot help seeing that a bad tariff, which might presently be amended, is a less evil than a crash, commercial, political and social, which would threaten the very life of the republic." That this is the view taken by the sound money Democrats is evidenced by the number of leading Democratic papers that have deserted Bryan and have come

AN IMMENSE LIBRARY.

That of the British Museum Has Nearly Forty Miles of Shelves.

SIR E. Maunde Thompson gives some figures to show the extent of the library of printed books at the British Museum, and the rate of increase at which it has grown. More than half a century after the foundation of the museum the library had not increased even threefold. In the year 1821 there were less than 176,000 volumes. But twenty years had not elapsed when these had more than doubled in number. In 1838 there were computed to be 235,000 volumes in the department. Twenty years later these again had more than doubled. In 1858 there were 550,000 volumes. Having once obtained an impetus, the mass rapidly increased and this moment the number of volumes is calculated to amount to the enormous total of 1,750,000, not counting single sheets or parts of works that are accumulating.

The space which this mass of printed material occupies has to be reckoned in miles. The shelves of the reading room and iron galleries constructed around it, which are known as the

MISS HELEN KELLER.

DEAF, DUMB AND BLIND, SHE IS YET WELL EDUCATED.

This Remarkable Young Girl Is Now Preparing to Take a College Course—How She Prepared Herself—How She Hears.

Helen Keller, deprived when nineteen months old of the powers of speech, hearing and sight, is now, at the age of 16 years, entering upon a course of studies which, she expects, will result in her receiving from Radcliffe College, the annex of Harvard University, the degree of bachelor of arts. She expects to recite in the same class, to pass the same examinations, and to enter in the same competitions with young women who are in possession of every faculty. She will enter Dr. Gilman's school in Cambridge this fall to complete her final preparation for Radcliffe.

Much was printed several years ago concerning this exceptionally gifted girl. She is developing into a woman of beauty and attainments. She is fulfilling all the promise of her younger years, when Richard Watson Gilder and Edmund Clarence Stedman dedicated poems to her, and the scientific world was discussing her remarkable case.

Her father is an editor in Tuscumbia, Ala. He is a descendant of the Fairfaxes of Virginia, and her mother was a Massachusetts Adams. She inherited a taste for literature and the study of languages.

She lost three of her senses when an infant, and practically nothing was done for her education until she was taken in charge when 7 years old by Miss Sullivan, who has been her companion and teacher ever since.

The child learned to understand language by feeling the organs of speech of the persons who addressed her. She learned to talk by imitating the motions of the lips, larnyx and teeth, which she observed in others. Her sense of touch became her eyes. She received impressions from the outside world by vibration, by touch, and by the spelling of words into her hand by means of the so-called manual alphabet.

Miss Keller has in this way learned to speak English, French and German, with almost equal facility. Since she has been a pupil of the Wright-Humason school in this city she has read many of the German and French classics by means of raised letters. In a clear, well-modulated voice she quotes Shakespeare, Schiller and Racine.

A Frenchman whom the girl met recently, heard her speak, and did not detect her inability to see and hear until she astonished him by putting her fingers to his lips to ascertain what he was saying. Her eyes are clear and bright. Her face is cheerful, and she has none of the hopeless look so common to those who are blind.

She has made some progress in mathematics, although on account of her imaginative and poetic disposition she does not reach the average in the exact sciences. She has written some sketches which show an insight and observation which would hardly seem possible to one with such limitations. She has an exceptional gift of language and her productions are rhetorically perfect.

She will be accompanied during her college course by Miss Sullivan, who will interpret to her by a sort of telegraph upon the palm of the hand what the teachers are saying. She will sit in the class room, and were it not for the woman beside her constantly holding her hand, it would be impossible to distinguish her from the [illegible] eyed and bright-faced young w[illegible]und her. The "Kelsey" Corrugated Warm Air Generator.

Any ordinary Hot Air Furnace will produce heat if you will only supply enough fuel. The "Kelsey" has several special and valuable features but most important is that it will give more heat with less fuel and is the most durable heater made.

The "Kelsey" fire pot being constructed of several upright, tubular, corrugated, cast iron sections (see cut) around which the fire passes and up through which the cold air passes while being heated, and this entire section being wrapped with a heavy steel casing which becomes heated by the fire striking it when passing down outside of upright sections towards smoke pipe, it in turn warms the air that passes up between this steel casing and the galvanized iron casing, this explains why the "Kelsey" has three times more radiating surface and warm air capacity than an ordinary Furnace. The "Kelsey" heats every room evenly, wheresoever located, with a nice, mild, healthful warm air that will not injure your furniture.

The "Kelsey" will heat rooms 60 feet distant.

The "Kelsey" does not heat your cellar.

The "Kelsey" is absolutely gas and dust proof.

THE FORESTRY MOVEMENT.

Among the economic reforms which are at the present engaging the attention of statesmen and legislators there is none of greater importance to the future welfare of the country than the appreciation of the principles of practical forestry in the management of our timber resources. Old nations have long since been compelled by the necessities of the case, to take stringent measures for preserving the forests from destruction, and Canadians should be wise enough to profit by their experience, without waiting for the worst evils caused by deforestation. The annual report of Mr. Thomas Southworth, Clerk of Forestry, just received, contains a great deal of valuable information on the subject. It presents a comprehensive review of the progress of the science of forestry, and the more important developments of the movement in the United States and elsewhere. The problem in Ontario is dealt with at length, and some conclusions presented which show the question in a new light and tend to remove many popular misconceptions. Mr. Southworth has no sympathy with the view that forests should be kept untouched by the axe. He points out that the true economical policy is to grow trees wherever they can be grown better than any other crop, and to maintain perpetual reserves on the comparatively sterile broken soil that is unfit for farming purposes. But he would treat timber as a crop to be harvested when mature, care being taken, however, to ensure its reproduction. Farmers will find much in the report to interest and instruct them regarding the utilization of waste lands by tree-planting. Many facts and statistics are given in connection with lumbering, pulp-making and wood manufactures, showing what kinds of timber are valuable for manufacturing purposes, or likely to become so. The observance of Arbor Day in the schools, the effect of clearing the forests on the water supply and other subjects are dealt with. Among the contents of the report are carefully prepared special articles on the cultivation and economic value of some forest trees, by Mr. A. Kirkwood of the Crown Lands Department, and a well written description of Algonquin Park by Mr. T. M. Gibson. Anyone desirous of obtaining a copy of the report can do so by sending his name and address to Mr. Thomas Southworth, Bureau of Forestry, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

new library, all told, extend to more than eight and twenty miles; those in the rest of the department to eleven miles. It may be noticed that this total of thirty-nine miles is nearly the same as that of the shelving of the French National Library, according to recent calculations. The prospect of increase of this mileage may be viewed with comparative equanimity in connection with the storage of the ordinary octavos of literature, but when once contemplated the rapid growth of newspapers the limits of the available space within the present buildings are almost within sight.

The Former Slave Market.

On benches so placed as to command a good view where the buyers, coarse-looking Turks, whose calm searching gaze seemd to take in every detail. The merchant conducting the sale stood before them, talking and gesticulating with great vehemence. He turned to one of the pens, which was filled with young Circassian women, most of whom were very handsome. They were seated close together on the ground in an attitude of listless despondency their white garments showing around them, and as they gazed up at me with their sad, dark eyes, I felt painfully how they must envy the free and happy stranger who came to look on them in their infancy and misery.

The slave-trader, came forward, followed by a phlegmatic-looking Turk, and seizing one of the women by the arm, forced her to stand up before this man, who, it appeared, wished to buy her. He proceeded to inspect her, very much in the same manner as he might have examined a horse or a dog, and his decision was unfavorable; he turned away with a contemptuous movement of the head, and the slave-merchant, in a rage, thrust back the unfortunate girl, who sank down trembling, among her companions in captivity. This scene was as much as we could stand, and we left the place hurriedly at once; it is well indeed that such rites can be witnessed no more; at least in Europe.—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Food of Whales.

The food of whales has long been known to consist of minute sea crustacea. Mr. Gray was familiar not only with the whale's food, but observed its manner of feeding, and the way in which it took its nap "after meals." "No doubt," he wrote, "whales are very particular in the quality of their food, for they are never to be found feeding where the water is dirty, but almost invariably in clean, clear, dark-blue or light olive-green water. The usual way in which a whale feeds is to choose a spot where the food is plentiful, and swim backward and forward for two or three hundred yards, with the nose just under water. They invariably swim from one side of the boat back again to where they started from with their mouths open. They then close their jaws and swallow the food caught.

"They will go on in this way feeding for an hour or more; after that they will disappear under the nearest ice and sleep there until they come out for exercise or for another meal. Unlike other warm-blooded animals, they do not require to breathe through their nostrils while asleep, and they do not do so. Whales can sleep as well under water as they do upon the surface, as I have often seen them disappear under solid ice and remain there for many hours at a time. Sometimes they fall asleep with their heads down and only their tails standing out of the water."—London Spectator.

The Tramp's Request.

"What are you doing here?" said the woman to the tramp, who had got over the wall just in time to escape the bull dog.

"Madam," he said, with dignity, "I did intend to request something to eat, but all I ask now is that, in the interest of humanity, you'll feed that dog."—London Tit-Bits.

short address, a [illegible] copy of which taken from the Philadelphia Press, I send you, says Superintendent Johnston of the Indian State Institute for the Deaf and Dumb, thinking you may be interested in reading it. Helen is a fine-looking young girl, absolutely artless and pure in heart and mind. The evils of this life have been kept from her, and she stands the personification of all that is sweet, pure and lovable. It has been said of her that "her accomplishments and intellect are trifles in comparison with her exquisite character." Deprived, when about eighteen months old, of both sight and hearing by a terrible fever, she never acquired speech and remained deaf, dumb and blind until 7 years of age, when Miss Anna Sullivan was sent by Mr. Anagnos, director of the Perkins Institute for the Blind, at Boston, to instruct her. What followed is now well known. She rapidly acquired speech, and now, when but a few weeks over 16, she speaks not only the English language, but also French and German, and will soon enter Harvard to complete her general education. Her progress has been marvelous in the widest sense of the term, and the previous training of Laura Bridgeman is eclipsed in every way.

Helen is a tall girl for her age, well developed and graceful, fealless and free in her movemnts, unlike most of the blind. She is cheerful and full of life and jolity, and not only appreciates fun, but often is the cause of it. Her memory is tenacious and marvelous, and she possesses a fund of information upon almost every subject. In this connection it is proper to add that Helen is very frequently held up as an example of what can be done in giving speech to the deaf. This is unfair and misleading to many parents of such children. Helen should not be used as a standard for comparison, for she stands far and away beyond the average child either hearing or deaf, in mental endowments.—New York Herald.

Her Preference.

He—Which would you prefer to be, Miss Maud, a broker or a banker?

She—I think I would prefer to be a oan.

The Reason.

"Come, let us reason together," asys the young woman to the young man, who has just made the rusty old cry of "The women are crowding us out."

"Well, I don't mind listening to your talk, but I can't see how that will increase my salary, or open more avenues for making money," he says respectfully, yet doggedly.

"I am not keeping you out of a position, nor keeping your salary down, at all. I am only trying to earn my own living, and I have to earn yours," she answered spiritedly.

"Just look at the thousands of girls who are now holding positons that were held by men and at much better salaries. Doesn't that mean that thousands of men have been crowded out?"

"No, it doesn't. We never get a position unless there is a vacancy. We don't make vacancies, we only fill them."

"Well, if you weren't around, they would have to take us."

"But we can't help being around."

"Yes, that's so."—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

An Unconscious Humorist.

"I would feel more at home on a scaffold than I do on a platform," said the carpenter who was making his first public speech before the union.

And then he declared that he would be hanged if he could tell what they were all laughing at.

Letters Come.

Letters come day by day telling us that this person has been cured of dyspepsia, that person of Bad Blood, and another of Headache, still another of Biliousness, and yet others of various complaints of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels or Blood, all through the intelligent use of Burdock Blood Bitters.

It is the voice of the people recognizing the fact that Burdock Blood Bitters cures all diseases of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels and Blood.

Mr. T. G. Ludlow, 334 Colborne Street, Brantford, Ont., says: During seven years prior to 1886, my wife was sick all the time with violent headaches. Her head was so hot that it felt like burning up. She was weak, run down, and so feeble that she could hardly do anything, and so nervous that the least noise startled her. Night or day she could not rest and life was a misery to her. I tried all kinds of medicines and treatment for her but she steadily grew worse until I bought six bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters from C. Stork & Son, of Brampton, Ont., for which I paid $5.00, and it was the best investment I ever made in my life. Mrs. Ludlow took four out of the six bottles—there was no need of the other two, for those four bottles made her a strong, healthy woman, and removed every ailment from which she had suffered, and she enjoyed the most vigorous health. That five dollars saved me lots of money in medicine and attendance thereafter, and better than that it made home a comfort to me.

POWER OF LITTLE THINGS.

The preacher spoke of little things,
Their influence and power,
And how the little pitted speck
Made all the apple sour.

He told how great big sturdy oaks
From little acorns grew,
And how the tiny little stone
The burly giant slew.

But the cyclist sat there unimpressed
By all the speaker's fire,
Until he went outside and found
A pin had pierced his tire.

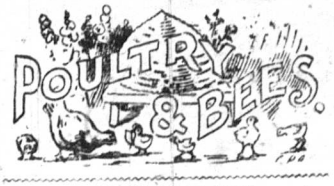
Chicken House Vermin.

J. W. Caughey says in Country Gentleman: Warm weather is again bringing on chicken vermin in abundance, and if you want to keep two unprofitable flocks in your coop, just do nothing to exterminate the nuisance. Buy some refined salts, such as are used for medicinal purposes, and dilute them in a large quantity of water. This freely spray about the chicken houses and it will prove its value. The only objection to this material is its cost—a pint bottle costs 75 cents, but in the end certainly it is cheaper than the tormentors. Carbolic acid is also good. I remember an instance when through neglect a house became thoroughly infected with mites or lice. They remained after fumigating, to my astonishment; then kerosene emulsion, known to be good also failed; carbolic acid was tried, and the insects departed bag and baggage. Naturally carbolic acid is our remedy now after this test. Take a bottle of carbolic acid, a pail of water and a good spraying pump, and success is certain. A single trial will convince skeptical people of its effectiveness. These spraying campaigns should be practically pursued every few weeks, and if you are not rewarded, it will not be the fault of carbolic acid spraying.



MANIPULATING BEES.

Their Demeanor to You is a Clear Case of Cause and Effect.

The demeanor of bees toward an individual depends largely upon his b aring and treatment of them. Longstroth, in his excellent treatise, "Langstroth on the Honey Bee," says:

"Let all your motions about your hives be gentle and slow; never crush or injure the bees; acquaint yourself fully with the principles of management, and you will find you have little more than the horns of a favorite cow or the heels of your faithful horse."

USE OF VEIL AND B. E SMOKER.

Most bee manipulators, however, grow somewhat indifferent to stings, since in time they become so inoculated with the poison of the bee that the pain of the sting is less severe and the swelling slight. But to avoid the sting is, with some of the races more recently introduced into this country, simply a question of care in manipulation and a free use of smoke. It is not meant that the bees should be stupefied with smoke, but merely alarmed and subjugated, and whenever they show any disposition to act on the offensive recourse is to be had to smoke.

It is not necessary that the smoke should be from a particular source, but that from certain substances, as tobacco, subjugates them more quickly, while burning puffballs stupefies them for the time. There are some objections to these substances which do not apply to wood, either partially decayed or sound, and as the latter when in a good smoker holds TORTURES OF RHEUMATISM.

The pains of rheumatism are removed and the disease driven from the system by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters, the conqueror of thousands of the severest cases.

Mrs. J. M. Monkman, of Arkwright, Ont., says:—I took inflammatory rheumatism in February, 1894, and doctored for it some weeks, but found I was getting worse. All my joints were swollen very much and I was not able to leave my bed, and could get neither sleep nor rest. Hearing from a neighbor that she got your Burdock Blood Bitters for her daughter who had the same disease and it cured her, I purchased a bottle, and after taking about the half of it I found myself recovering, and after continuing it for some time I recovered, but when the cold weather set in this winter I found it returning again. So I commenced to take the B. B. B. again, when I found, after taking it about a week, that all pain and swelling of the joints had disappeared, and consider that I am entirely cured.

ACME OF CRUELTY.

The Horrible Torture Invented by Comanche Indians.

Colonel R. I. Dodge, who was stationed for years on the frontier, where he had abundant opportunity to study the Indian, has written a book about them. In it he tells of the fiendish cruelty of a party of Comanches who captured a Mexican during a raid. They started with him to their camp across what are called the "Stake Plains."

"At a water-hole on this tableland," continues Colonel Dodge, "the party halted for several days. Telling the prisoner they wanted it for some religious ceremony, they set him to digging a hole in the ground. Working with a knife and hands, he in a day or two completed a pit about three feet in diameter and over five feet deep. Early the next morning a rope was tied about the ankles of the captive and wound spirally round his legs and body to the neck, binding his arms tightly to his sides. Rigid and immovable, the man was then planted upright, like a post in the hole, the dirt filled in and tightly rammed down around him. When all was completed nothing but his head was visible. Then they scalped his head, cut off his lips and eyelids, taunted and left him.

"On their arrival in camp the party described in detail their punishment of the Mexican, and in all the tribe it was regarded as an exquisite piece of pleasantry. The man would live they said, eight days, revived at night by the cold of the high plains, to be driven mad the next day by the hot sun beating on his scalped head and defenceless eyeballs."

ed, it will not be the fault of earth the acid spraying.

Utilizing Bulky Refuse.

A large amount of valuable material may be utilized if cooked. Pea pods, string beans, apples, squashes and many other articles if thoroughly boiled will furnish a quantity of food that is really more serviceable than too much grain. Ducks and geese may be kept at but little expense by such mode of feeding, while turkeys and chickens will appreciate the change at once. Turnips and carrots if cooked and fed to all kinds of fowls will furnish a cheap and nutritious diet, promoting the health and preventing too much fat. In feeding such material no grain is necessary except at night. One of the most valuable foods is cooked potatoes and sour milk. If this is fed, being first thickened with ground oats, it will cause the hens to lay more eggs than when an exclusive grain diet is given.

A Home-made Drinking Fountain.

The cleanest and cheapest home-made drinking fountain is constructed as follows: Take an empty fruit can, and with a wire nail or sharp end of a file, make a hole through the tin can about one-fourth to one-half inch from the open end; fill the can with clean, fresh water, place a saucer upside down on the level ground. This will leave the can setting upside down in the saucer, and the saucer will stand full of water up to the hole in the can. This is the nicest way to water chickens, and is economical. They cannot get into it with their feet, and it runs out only as fast as they drink it. This should be tried now.—Country Gentleman.

latter when in a good smoker holds fire best and is very effective, it is advisable to keep a good supply at hand. Seasoned hickory or hard maple are best, though beech, soft maple, etc., are good. The most improved bellows smokers, when supplied with such fuel sawed five or six inches long and split into bits half an inch or less in size, will burn all day and be ready at any time to give a good volume of blue smoke, by which bees of most of the races now cultivated in this country are subdued at once.

With Italian or black bees a puff or two of smoke should be given at the hive entrance, and the cover and honey board, or quilt, removed slowly and carefully, smoke being driven in as soon as the least opening is made and the volume increased enough to keep down all bees as fast as the covering is removed. The smoker may then be placed on the windward side of the hive to allow the fumes to pass over the top and toward the operator. The frames may then be gently pried loose and lifted out carefully without crushing a bee if it can be avoided. Crushing bees fills the air with the odor of poison, which irritates the bees. So also when one bee is provoked to sting, others follow because of the odor of poison.

Too much smoke will often render certain manipulations difficult; for example, when queens are to be sought out, or nuclei or artificial swarms made, volumes of smoke blown in between the combs will drive the bees from them so that they will cluster in clumps on the bottoms of the frames or in the corners of the hives. A little observation and judgment will enable one to know when the bees need smoke and how much of it to prevent any outbreak on their part, which it is always best to forestall rather than be obliged to quell after it is fully under way.

The frame hive as now made—with metal rabbets and arrangements for surplus honey, and quilts instead of honey boards—reduces propolization to a minimum and renders the danger of irritating the bees by jarring when manipulating much less. As a prerequisite to rapid and safe manipulation perfectly straight combs are necessary. —Frank Benton's Manual of Apiculture, issued by U. S. Dept. of Agriculture.

Facts for Farmers.

The meannesses of human nature are a bar to co-operative effort. There is too much pig nature in the combinations.

Nothing pays better on the farm than to keep accurate accounts—to know what is raised at a loss and what yields profit.

Mr. C. Donnelly, wholesale liquor dealer, Alliston, Ont., was troubled for years with Itching Piles. He was persuaded by Jas. McGarvey, Alliston, livery man, to use Chase,s Ointment, which he did, was cured, has had no return of them and highly recommends this Ointment as a soverign cure for Piles.

BARN YARD SCRAPER.

How to Make one That Does Not Dig Into the Ground.

For cleaning off a barnyard when dirty there is nothing better than a scraper so constructed as not to dig into the ground. A cheap and serviceable one may be made by almost any farmer. Take an inch board (A A in cut) four feet long and 12 to 16 inches wide. The side arms (C C) reach from the tongue to hooks or pivots (E E), as depicted. The handles are fastened to be in comfortable reach when the scraper is vertical, or nearly so. The object is to scrape the top merely, instead of thrusting into the ground, as a scraper is contrived to do. A lever (D) which is hinged to back end of tongue and provided with a otch at the proper point, will hold the scraper in an upright position. When the load is to be dumped, raise the lever, thus disengaging its hold on the notch, whereupon the scraper will turn forward with the handles on arms (C C). If board A has a thickness of only one inch, it will be necessary to strengthen it with cross-battens, as shown by dotted lines.

Sand makes a nice covering for the floor of the laying house during summer, because the hens need scratching material and gritty substance that they can pick over. Bugs will to some extent find it a good place to be, but only until the hen's sharp eye spies them. If you use sand, be careful to rake it over every day, keeping it fresh and clean, as it soon packs down and becomes hard and uninviting to hens to pick among.

A Good Insecticide.

A reader asks me whether tobacco dust should be applied to vines when they are wet with dew or when they are dry. This moves me to say that the tobacco dust, or the bone meal, or the mixture of both, is not intended as a coating for the leaves, which would make them poisonous or unpalatable, but as a covering for the soil, that will make the atmosphere very uncomfortable for all insects and worms. I like to have th matrial rmain dry and dusty as long as possible. In that case it has a more thorough effect on bugs and beetles that have hard shells. The wet tobacco or tobacco tea, or even the fumes of wet tobacco, are very unwholesome to the soft-bodied insects, worms, etc. I find that cucumber beetles do not like to work in dust, and least of all in tobacco dust. When I put this latter inch deep around melon or cucumber plants, the yellow-striped beetle promptly takes its departure and will stay away as long as the tobacco remains dusty or as long as it gives off a strong tobacco smell.

Let me repeat, too, that this same waste material is one of our best and cheapest general insecticides. We can use it both under glass and in open air. By all means keep a good supply of it on hand. Possibly you can get sweepings from a near cigar factory, or you may buy the material by the barrel at about $2.50 or $3. It will last you for years and help you to keep the premises clear of the various pests that prey upon your crops and animals. If you scatter tobacco dust by hand or with bellows, over your rows of peas, just at nightfall, you can kill the slugs that are so often eating all the lower foliage off and greatly damage the crop. Or if you dust it in the same way over your currant and gooseberry bushes, when infested with worms, you will quickly see the worms disappear. In the same way you can quickly kill all the leaf-eating worms and slugs on your trees and bushes everywhere. The tent caterpillar and the fall web-worm, and all other caterpillars on trees and plants, give up the ghost within a few minutes after coming in contact with tobacco dust. And besides all this, tobacco dust is worth about what it costs as a fertilizer.—Practical Farmer.

ment, especially when a confession is wanted from a criminal, is to place him where a drop of water will fall upon one certain spot in his shaven crown for hours, or days, if necessary. The torture this inflicts is proved by an experience that Sandow, the strong man, had.

When he was in Vienna a few years ago a school teacher bet him that he would not be able to let a half litre of water drop upon his hand until the measure was exhausted. A half litre is only a little more than a pint. Sandow laughed at the very idea of his not being able to do this. So a half litre measure was procured and a hole drilled in the bottom just sufficient to let the water escape drop by drop.

Then the experiment began. Sandow laughed and chatted gayly at first. The schoolmaster kept count upon the number of drops. At about the two hundredth Sandow grew a little more serious. Soon an expression of pain crossed his face. With the entrance into the third hundredth his hand began to swell and grow red. Then the skin burst. The pain grew more and more excruciating. Finally at the four hundred and twentieth drop, Sandow had to give up and acknowledge himself vanquished.—Pittsburg Despatch.

Talking to Them.

There is a fish-dealer in New York who has a large number of rich customers. Once or twice a week his store can be found full of ladies who are doing their own marketing. The dealer is all smiles to his customers on such days, and very anxious to keep their goodwill and trade. For some time an Irishman had been coming in the place, and after going from stand to stand, and peering long and closely at the fish, he usually wound up by purchasing some cheap specimen of the finny tribe, and departing. This was annoying to the dealer when his place was full of customers, and so one morning when the Irishman entered and began going from one stand to another as usual he called out:

"Look here, my good man, what are you always smelling my fish for?"

The question was heard by every one, and they listened for the answer.

"Faith, oim not smellin' thim; it's talkin' to thim oi am."

"Talking, did you say?"

"Yis; sure oim askin' thim the news from the sea."

"Well," said the dealer, impatiently, "what did they say?"

"Sure, they didn't know, yer honor; they felt me they hadn't been there fer over a month."—Harper's Round Table.

An Effective Retort.

The car was just about full. That is, there were no vacant seats, although a very fat woman, who must have weighed in the neighborhood of three hundred pounds, might have squeezed her surplus avoirdupois together had she been so inclined. At Chestnut street a man boarded the car, and he was very thin. In fact, he might, at a pinch, have secured a position in a museum, as a living skeleton. He looked hard at the fat woman for a few minutes, and when the conductor came in to collect his fare he pointedly remarked: "You evidently don't charge for weight on this line." Before the conductor had time to reply, the fat woman, who had noticed the hard looks cast in her direction: "No, they don't charge for weight. If they did they would never have stopped for you."—Philadelphia Record.

White Spots on the Nails.

The little white spots appearing on the finger nails are due to some subtle action of the blood, upon which all the bones, sinews, muscles and organs in the body are dependant for nutrition. They sometimes disappear of their own accord, but there is no know cure. In reality they signify no derangement of the system.

Bicycles as Law Makers.

Bicycles are creating a good deal of new law in Great Britain. In England they have been declared to be vehicles; in Scotland, in a case to recover insurance for death due to a bicycle accident, they have been declared to be not vehicles, the judge declaring that they could be no more considered such than skates.

THE DAIRY

STRATHROY DAIRY SCHOOL.

Its Equipment and the Work It Has Done and Is Prepared For.

When the Hon. John Dryden, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, decided to establish a branch dairy school at Strathroy for the convenience of the western part of the province, there were not a few who considered that such action was inopportune, as they asserted that the number of students who would take advantage of the school would be very limited. Such, however, has not been the case, and it is evident, says Farming for July, in spite of the depression in dairying, that the school is well appreciated, and will be still more so in the future.

The school building, of which we give illustrations, was formally opened on February 14th last. It is a large and substantial brick structure, with large, airy and well lighted rooms, and is furnished with a complete outfit of the latest appliances for butter and cheese making and milk testing. All the apartments are well arranged, not only for the work, but also for the comfort of the students.

The school is under the directorship of Dr. Mills, M.A., LL.D., president of the Ontario Aricultural College, Guelph. Mr. F. J. Sleightholm, B.S.A., is the resident superintendent, and is also instructor in milk testing. The instructor in cheesemaking is Mr. W. Waddell, and in buttermaking Messrs. H. Smith and J. E. Creaiy. The course lasts two weeks and the capacity of the school is thirty students, fifteen in each department. The school is on the same plan as the Kingston Dairy School, and bears to the college at Guelph the same relation as a public school does to a high school.

A 20-horse power engine supplies power to the buttermaking machinery. The butter department contains three power separators, a Russian, with a capacity of 1,200 pounds per hour; an Alpha De Laval, of 2,500 pounds, and an Alexandra, of 1,000 pounds. A hand separator of 200 pounds capacity is also kept. About 60 pounds of butter a day was made during the session which ended in April last. A twin cream vat was used to ripen the cream, and a Mason worker for handling the product most of which was sold in Strathroy and London. For storing the butter until it was shipped a refrigerator of 500 pounds capacity was erected. A very neat arrangement just inside the butter rooom, in the shape of a draining table, with two steam jets, has been found an admirable adjunct to the department.

In the milk testing department four Babcock milk testers have been used. Skim milk, buttermilk, whey, whole milk and cream have been tested daily. The students have been thoroughly drilled in this important department in all its phases, and the use of a Quevenne lactometer has been fully explained. This department has acted as a check upon the others, and skim milk, buttermilk and whey have stood the testing well, the two former rarely exceeding one-tenth of one per cent. of butter fat, and the latter two-tenths. Milk has been paid for according to the per cent. of butter fat.

Six hundred pounds of milk were consumed daily in the cheese room. This department contains two vats of 800

Man's View Of Marriage.

"IS MARRIAGE A FAILURE?"

It is not uncommon for men to bewail the fact that marriage so seldom means a real companionship—that man and wife are separated by difference of taste, of mental outlook, of general interest, in life. It is perhaps even more common to hear women blamed for what is called breach of contract in the marriage relation. If the wife be delicate, run-down, nervous and irritable, if her smile and her spirits have taken flight, it worries her husband as well as herself. Even worse symptoms may follow—the woman suffers from sleeplessness and fainting spells, her head is in a whirl, her back aches, and she has that awful crowding-down feeling in the abdomen. It depends on the woman whether she will permit these troubles to continue day by day leading to a life of misery.

Thousands have been cured by taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and why not you? A healthy woman is always interesting; she passes for a beauty because she is happy, and her good spirits are contagious. Good nature goes with health; irritability and peevishness with sickness.

Those who suffer from the derangements, disorders and diseases of the sex should remember that Dr. R.V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has, for over a quarter of a century, made the diseases of women a specialty. Send thirty-one (31) cents (for postage and duty) to him, at above address, for his great medical book of 1000 pages profusely illustrated with wood-cuts and colored plates.

It contains photographs, names and addresses of a vast number who have been cured.

You can correspond with them and learn how they cured themselves without having to consult a doctor.

AN IDEAL RATION.

Three Important Particulars in the Quality of a Ration.

An ideal ration is more than what is termed a balanced ration, says the Country Gentleman. A particular combination of foods may be ideal in the proportions of digestible nutrients which it contains, and at the same time be not the best possible ration in other respects.

There are three important particulars which must be considered in judging the quality of a ration: First, its palatableness; second, its ease of digestion, and third, its composition.

For a thousand-pound dairy cow of large milk capacity, we should regard the following as one of the best possible rations for maintaining a high rate of production:

	Protein.	Carbh's.	Fats.
10 lb. early-cut, well-cured clover hay.....	0.65	3.50	0.16
30 lb. corn ensilage, from mature corn....	0.40	4.20	0.21
3 lb. corn meal.....	0.21	1.90	0.13
2 lb. wheat bran.....	0.25	0.90	0.06
3 lb. pea meal.....	0.54	1.70	0.03
3 lb. linseed meal.....	0.81	1.00	0.08
Total.....	2.86	13.20	0.67

Total digestible matter, 16.73 lbs.
Nutritive ratio, 1 to 5.1.

The above ration contains a desirable variety, including one succulent food, has a larger proportion of those materials most easily digested, and is generous in quantity. In fact, it is a ration which is best adapted to the ideal cow, that is, the vigorous animal with large milk capacity. The quantity and proportion of protein are somewhat larger than in the German standard ration, and we believe this to be a change in the right direction. We regard it as unfortunate that there has been a tendency in this country to advocate a ration with a nutritive ratio wider than 1 to 5.5. To be sure it has been shown that it is the practice of certain American farmers to feed rations with a wider ratio, but a practice is not necessarily in accord with a correct standard.

Keeping a Milk Record.

To know something of what the cows are doing it is necessary to keep a record of the milk from day to day. Hang up a bit of board and a pencil in the stable, with scales for weighing. Tack

PROPHECY.

Upon his wooden hobby horse
He galloped to the play,
The delight in his rosy cheeks,
His laughter stirring gay.
And one who watched that restless ride
Across the nursery floor,
And smiled upon the flaxen hair
And the wooden steed he bore—
Yet saw, through eyes by sudden tears,
A wider stage and new—
Her little lad a soldier grown,
The prophecy come true!

Years after, when the play was real,
And through the crowded square
Brave men to battle marched away
Amid the trumpet's blare,
One watched with all a mother's pride
Their captain strong and tall;
Yet as she looked with loving eyes,
The pageant faded all!
She only saw a fair-haired child
Who galloped to the war,
Upon his wooden hobby horse,
Across the nursery floor!

LOVE AND BUSINESS.

"Purely a business arrangement, Mr. Quennell! Oh, you need not look grave over it; we always knew that Margaret was a steady, clear-headed, practical girl, and she has shown her good sense in accepting Joseph Postgate. A most suitable match; keeps the business together capitally."

"Do you spak with authority or only on conjecture, Miss Smith?" asked her companion, seriously.

"Why we all know it. Margaret was in at my house last Friday talking about all the arrangements of the wedding, as coolly as if it was only a picnic or a tennis party. There is no love about it, and neither of them makes any pretense at it."

Mr. Quennell shook his head.

"I should not have thought Margaret was that kind of a girl," he said, and he ruminated sadly as he walked away.

He had known Margaret Postgate all her life. Her father had been one of his warmest friends and he had been as familiar in the house as a relative. It was at his suggestion that Mr. Postgate had, during his last illness, invited his far-away cousin, Joseph Postgate, to become manager of his business.

Joseph was a big, young man, to whom might be applied the adjectives that Mrs. Smith had used in speaking of Margaret—steady, clear-headed, practical. He had come among them quite a stranger and had won confidence at once. His management of the business showed that he deserved it, but his teratment of Margaret, both before her father's death and since, had been so very cool and so severely business-like that Mr. Quennell was surprised to find after a two-months' absence from the town that the two were engaged to be married. Undoubtedly it was the best thing for the business, but it is not quite a nice thing for a girl to marry for such a reason. Mrs. Smith might be mistaken; he would use the privilege of an old friend and go to Margaret herself.

Margaret was just parting from Joseph as Mr. Quennell entered her drawing-room. Old Mrs. Harrow, her companion, was in the room, and certainly the manner of the engaged couple was far removed from tenderness or sentiment.

Margaret's brow was puckered and her face full of seriousness and consideration.

"You will see to the matter, then, Joseph? Remember, I do not wish the old lady to be persecuted, but I am convinced that her scampish son is our real opponent. I should like to get at him without touching her, if possible."

"Very good, I will bear your wishes in mind, and you shall hear again before we take any decided step. Good-bye, Margaret."

"Good-bye," she answered, calmly, and they shook hands without any show of emotion or embarrassment.

Mr. Quennell would have liked to see a little embarrassment, and he thought that lovers should kiss at parting. These did not.

As soon as Mrs. Harrow left them alone he began upon the subject that so sorely exercised him.

"So you have taken advantage of my absence to get yourself engaged, Marget?"

"Yes, Mr. Quennell, I should have written to you about it if I had not known you were to return so soon. It seemed the best thing to do, as the ate in the afternoon before she could scape to make a promised visit to a sick woman in a neighboring street.

Alice May was eagerly expecting her.

She was half-sitting, half-lying on her couch, with a flushed face and sparkling eyes, holding a letter in her thin hands.

"Miss Postgate, I've heard from Charlie!" she cried excitedly. "He is coming to-morrow, and it is all owing to you! Oh, I wish—I wish you could wait to see him!"

"Is he really coming, Alice? I am very glad. Why, it makes you look almost well again to know he is so near. What has he been doing since he left you?"

"One job and another, nothing to depend on. The little money he's sent me has been all he could spare. He's got a settled job now in a carpenter's yard. And if I'm well enough to go back with him he says he can manage to keep a roof over our heads. It's all owing to you, Miss Postgate, and the recommendation that you got Mr. Joseph to give him. But, oh, what my poor Charlie has been through!"

"And you, too, Alice. You have suffered quite as much as your husband. If you could have foreseen all you were to go through you would never have had courage to marry."

"Oh, Miss Postgate! And you to be married to-morrow! Would not I go through twice the trouble for the sake of the love? You'll never come to feel the pinch of poverty as we've done, but if you knew that even that was coming upon you, would you turn your heart back from Mr. Joseph to-night, and say you'd rather live without him? No, ma'am, you know you wouldn't."

Margaret colored and bit her lips. This woman was preaching the same doctrine as Mr. Quennell, and yet she had never heard Mrs. Smith's commendation of the "business arrangement." And yet marriage with love had brought her with rapid steps along the downward road.

First Charlie had fallen sick and recovered to find himself out of work, with a speedy prospect of having a baby to provide for as well as himself and his wife. Then the baby had come, a poor little actor on life's stage, whose part was as sad as it was brief.

pounds capacity each, a curd sink, and cheese gang press, in which six cheeses may be pressed at once.

The sitting rooms, lecture hall, superintendent's office, and lavatories are located upstairs, and furnish every convenience.

During the session lectures were given every morning from 8.30 to 9.30 on the various branches of the work, as well as on the feeding and management of milch cows.

The school reopens in November, and applications for admission are already being made by intending students, thus showing its popularity.

Dairy Suggestions.

Always strain the milk as soon as it is drawn.

Butter once thoroughly warmed through will lose its flavor.

The milking should never be hurried, but the milk be drawn steadily and as it flows.

There is a great difference in dairy salt; test samples before buying in large quantities.

Hot weather is a trying time for butter. Eternal vigilance is the price of a first-class article.

It is the attention paid to seemingly insignificant things in dairying that make or mar the profits.

Keeping Dairy Cows for Profit

The present depressed condition of the prices of almost all farm products has brought us face to face with two great questions: 1st. How can we produce the greatest quantity of food from the least ground at the least cost? 2nd. What shall we do with the food? Some say, by their actions, sell it, but these themselves are being sold out. By all means let us feed what we grow, and let the cows form the base of our operations. I do not advocate that we should buy expensive cattle. Let us select from the cows we have those that give the fullest pail, having at the same time due respect to the symmetry of the animal. She should be rangy, of good size, capable, when properly fed, of giving a large quantity of milk and raising a calf that when raised and fattened will suit the taste of the most aristocratic Englishman; and let us not forget that the value of the calf and the feed has a direct bearing on the value of the cow. There is not much use at the present time advocating breeding either of acute milkers or heifers, because our people are not yet educated to feed them properly. Let us make the best use of what we have, improving them as we go along. The climatic conditions of our country are such that our cattle are exposed to a great deal of cold and rainy weather in the fall, while our winters are so long that we do not care to house them before it is really necessary, for it means both extra work and extra feed. Again in the spring they are kept in the stable until the grass is good, the weather warm, and the conditions favorable to animals' comfort.—D. N. McIntyre, Bruce Co., in Farmer's Advocate.

Milking Cows in Summer.

Unless a dairyman has a perfect stable it never pays to milk cows during the summer season in the winter stable.

It is essential to gilt-edged lacteal quality that cows be milked in a sweet, pure atmosphere. As soon as the milk leaves the udder and the air strikes it, it is subject to just the degree of contamination with which the air may be impregnated. In a medium of pure air you will have pure milk for a reasonable length of time, or until natural changes cause it to become acid.

In other words, if you select a cleanly place in which to milk your cows, the after care of the fluid will be greatly simplified. This is a point well worth observing, and I would exhort dairymen not to ignore it.—Ohio Farmer.

Dairy Pointers.

Churning at too high a temperature, or too long, will produce greasy butter, in which the grain is injured.

Large cows need more feed than smaller ones, and a cow in the flush of milk needs more than when dry.

business could not do without Joseph, and I have an absurd feeling that as I have grown up with the business it can not do without my money, at any rate, and this was the simplest way of entering into partnership."

"Then it is the business Joseph marries, and not you?"

"Both of us, Mr. Quennell. Do not speak in that disgusted tone. You do not expect either Joseph or me to do the sentimental, surely?"

"I did not expect to see Marget Postgate marry a man without any love for him. I am disappointed in you, Marget. When is this wedding to take place?"

"To-morrow month," answered Marget, with a little resentment in her voice. She objected to Mr. Quennell's rebuke, "Joseph wished it and there is no reason for delay."

"No occasion to waste time on love-making," he rejoined sarcastically. "Do you waste time on a honeymoon after it?"

"We are going to Paris and Switzerland," she answered, flushing a little angrily. "We decided to do the same sort of thing as other people and I have never been abroad."

Mr. Quennell subsided and kept his forebodings to himself. He resolved to have nothing to do with the wedding, and refused when Marget requested him to give her away, but ageing her look of disappointmnet he relented.

Plain as the wedding was to be, Margaret found her time fully occupied during the last month. An inconceivable number of matters, trifling and otherwise, insisted on being attended to, and she had little time for thought. She wondered how prospective brides, who had lovemaking also upon their hands, ever got through it all. And yet, amid all the press and worry, she was horrified now and again to find the recollection of Mr. Quennel's warning rise up to confront her as a dreadful doubt.

Suppose that she should weary of Joseph, with her practical business-like habits, his contempt of all idleness and frivolity, his utter independence of her—except from a business point of view?

The last day of her single life arrived—a day full of occupation. It was whose part was as sad as it was brief, and what with sorrow of heart and poor living, Alice had fallen into ill-health. Bit by bit the pretty house furniture had gone to pay the grocer and butcher, and nothing was left but the bare necessaries. Then for one fatal month Charlie took to drink, but love and Alice's heavenly patience reclaimed him. Things were at their worst when Margaret Postgate happened to meet them. She learned something of their history and began by employing Charlie on some small job. He heard of some sort of opening in a distant town, and Margaret undertook the charge of Alice while he went to see if there was a chance for him. Joseph was well known in that neighborhood, and she obtained a recommendation from him for Charlie, and a promise to write to one or two of his acquaintances there.

Joseph had done even more than he had promised, and she felt a glow of gratitude toward him as she remembered the trouble that he had taken over a matter that in no way concerned himself. Perhaps after all, it would be better than she expected, and they would prove to have more in common than business interests.

"I am afraid I do not know much about your sort of love, Alice," she said hurriedly, and bent over to kiss the sick girl. "But I am very thankful if I have been able to help you and your Charlie. I must go now, and you must let me give instead of receiving a wedding present.

She pressed a ten-pound note into Alice's hand and went away home.

She passed a restless night, and what sleep she had was full of dreams of Alice and Charlie and her own future fate. She arose, feeling singularly humble and distrustful of herself. At this moment she would have been willing to beg for a little grace, a short delay for consideration of what she was doing, if only it could be without creating a scandal. She entered the church anxious, troubled, with a beating heart.

She cast a frightened glance up the aisle, expecting to see Joseph, calm, business-like, unruffled, as she had seen him day by day. She saw him, looking bigger, stronger than ever, with a relaxing of the stern lines of his mouth, a misty tenderness in his eyes that she had never seen before.

He was not waiting for her in conventional fashion, he was coming down toward her, coming to fetch her. He was at her side, he held out his hand and she felt hers thrill in his strong clasp. He led her on, he bent over her and whispered in a deep, passionate voice:

"God bless you, my darling!" and a load fell from Margaret's heart. It was all right now, somehow; she did not understand it, at all, but how blind she had been!

It was all like a misty dream to her, till she found herself at home again, alone with Joseph. He held her close, showering kisses upon her, calling her by fond names that sounded strange in her ears.

She drew herself away from him.

"I—I did not know it was to be like this," she stammered. "I thought—"

"What did you expect it to be, my darling? Purely a business arrangement?" he asked, in happy mockery.

"I knew you liked me. I did not know you cared for me—I was not prepared—"

"Liked you, my Margaret? When I loved you from the first moment that I saw you! You would never see it, and I bore you a grudge for that, till I saw you come into the church today and forgave you."

"Forgave me?"

"Yes, my darling, I forgave you, for I saw that my wife was going to make up for all the shortcomings of my sweetheart."

Then Mr. Quennell came in and found Margaret with tearful eyes.

"What does this mean?" he asked her in an anxious whisper; "have you begun to repent already?"

"It means," she answered, smiling through the tears, "that we changed everything at the last minute and got married your way, after all."

"Bless the child," he exclaimed. "Then I knew you better than you knew yourself!"

"It seems to me," she said, meekly, "that it was Joseph who knew me best of all."—Exchange.

What They Do In Germany.

Dutch Peasants are proverbially stolid and slow but they are quick enough to grasp new ideas for increasing their comfort. For years they have used wooden sabots for footwear on account of their lightness and warmth; and now they have stockings made of a yarn which is spun out of pure wood fibre; and their coats and vests are interlined with Fibre Chamois, which is nothing more, or less than a wooden cloth, made as it is entirely from Spruce Fibre. These same stolid peasants realize thoroughly the non-conducting properties of the wood and avail themselves of the inexpensive warmth it provides. Fibre Chamois has a world wide reputation as a warmth giving interlining, for it is so light that its presence is hardly felt in a garment and yet it gives an absolute heartful protection from the coldest blasts of a long stormy winter.

No Fun in Matrimony

Lee Jim, late in the washee washee line in Kingston but now of Watertown, has just returned from a trip to China whither he went to marry the girl of his heart. The trip cost the long haired Jim something in the neighborhood of $800. He found his almond eyed beauty still true and the couple were married in due form, but strange to say Jim returned to America minus his wife. Mrs. Lee Jim, wouldn't cross the ocean because she was afraid it would make her "slea sick." Any woman who would treat a devoted lover so scurvily deserves to be left in China. Sam Yick, one of our local celestials doesn't bank much on marriage and it is a safe bet that Sam wouldn't blow in his "stuff" in a jaunt to China after a wife. He says: "China boy likee funee—no likee mallie. China boy wantee timee very much badee. Chinaee boy say go, wife say No—no goee, no wifee—settle China boy's funnee.

A Cowardly Plot.

"The meanest, most contemptible and most cowardly plot" says the Tweed News "that has been made known to the public in a long time past was that which has just come to light—a plot to injure the reputation of an innocent and respectable young lady. Saturday evening's mail brought to our office a letter from one of our subscribers in New York State in which was enclosed a clipping from the Watertown, N.Y., Daily Times, giving the particulars of the marriage of one of the fair daughters of the village of Enterprise, Ont., to a gentleman of the queen city. Our suspicion was aroused in consequence of the first report of the marriage appearing in a Watertown paper, while not the slightest mention of the affair was made in any of the local papers on this side of the line. Moreover the young lady in question was seen in Napanee on the day on which the marriage ceremony is said to have taken place. On receipt of the clipping a message was sent to the young lady at Erinsville and soon after a reply was received which contradicted the whole story. There are many surmises as to how the story got into print, but the most probable theory is that it was sent to the Watertown paper by some rejected, jealous lover, who in his frenzy determined to do his utmost to injure the reputation of his former sweetheart. The News has been given to understand that steps are being taken to find out who the guilty party is and that he will be called to answer before the courts for his contemptible trick."

A Dangerous Mistake

To ruin your eyes for the want of spectacles, or by the use of cheap misfitted ones, although our optican has satisfactorily fitted thousands of people, we believe there are others yet in this county who persist in the use of spectacles they know are destroying their eyes. Sceptics of this character should see the number of people young and old who come to us almost daily with blindness creeping on them, imploring at all costs for something to restore their sight. The majority of these unfortunates can trace their loss of sight to the use of trashy glasses sold to them by some incompetent vendor of spectacles. Our optican is constantly employed examining eyes, he will give yours a thoroughly scientific examination any week day or in the evening. Artificial lights.

The Cattle Poisoning Case.

Detective Greer, of the Ontario Investigation Department has been in this district enquiring into the recent cattle poisoning cases. In the matter of the cattle poisoned in Mr. Sagar's pasture field there does not exist any doubt but what the poison was put out by some despicable miscreant. In the case of Mr. Bowen's cattle it may be just possible that the death of the animals was due to eating weeds of a poisonous nature. Mr Bowen had been weeding a strawberry patch and the cattle had eaten plentifully of these weeds. There had been no poison sprinkled on these plants and the authorities are in a quandry to trace the real cause of the death of the cattle. In the interest of justice and the farmers a thorough investigation should be made and the stomachs of the dead animals analyzed.

Canada's Pride.

A little over a month hence the Fall Fairs will be commencing, and first and foremost will be the Industrial at Toronto, which is to be held this year from the 31st of August to the 12th of September.

Every Canadian is very properly interested in and justly proud of the success of this great Exhibition, because it brings prominently before them, as well as the outside world, the vast resources and products of our country, and the progress which is being made from year to year in its Agricultural and Industrial pursuits, consequently the approaching Industrial Fair is being looked forward to with increased interest and pleasurable anticipation, and many are already making arrangements to visit it. By thousands it is made the occasion of their annual holiday outing, and and it is usually a very enjoyable one. There is every indication that it will this year fully equal, if not excel, its predecessors. To meet the desires of those who usually look for this kind of thing, a large number of special attractions are being provided, of a new and interesting character. The Live Stock and all other exhibits, except cut flowers and fruit, will be on the grounds from Sept. 3rd, so that the first week of the Fair will be equally as good as the second. All entries have to be made before the 8th of August. The Toronto Exhibition has now become one of the best and most popular educational and entertainment enterprises on this continent, and those who have never visited it would be surprised at its magnitude and attractiveness, being almost like a small World's Fair. Prize Lists and Entry Forms can be procured by anyone desiring them by dropping a post card to Mr. H. J. Hill, Manager, Toronto.

finally arrived and bound up the wounded member. The arm was crushed to a pulp and the poor fellow suffered terribly. Hyslop has not yet reached man's estate, but appears to have all the earmarks of a hardened character. He was under the influence of liquor when the accident occurred and an examination of his right hand disclosed the fact that he had been applying croton oil to it in order to work money out of a credulous public. He was begging around town on Wednesday afternoon, but only succeeded in raising 40 cents, and this evidently went to procure whiskey. His father is dead, he says, but his step-mother lives in Brockville. He was conveyed to the Kingston General Hospital on the midnight train where his arm was amputated.

The Question Answered.

Parish of Camden.

Flower Carnival.

The members of the Horticultural Society will hold their annual Flower Carnival on Friday, Sept. 4th. Great preparations are being made to make this one of the events of the season. On the following Sunday the annual Flower Sunday will be held and the various churches in town will be handsomely and artistically decorated by the society. No efforts will be spared to make this display far surpass the one of last yeer.

A Correction.

We are requested to correct a misstatement in our report of the funeral of the late Mr. Allen Pringle in last week's issue. The choir of St. Mary Magdalene's church did not officiate on that occasion. We are informed that the choir of one parish can act officially in another only on the invitation of the clergyman in charge, and it is stated that the missionary at Selby could not possibly invite the choir of any christian church to assist at a rite conducted by a teacher who professed not to know "if there be any future life." Our informant draws attention to the very strange selection of hymns said to have been sung on the occasion so absolutely contradictory of the whole tenor of the address as reported in our columns.

Camp Le Nid.

Everything is lovely at Camp Le Nid and the proverbial goose (nothing personal) hangs suspended on high. We had the pleasure of a short stay with "the boys" in the beginning of the week and enjoyed ourselves immensely.

The camp has been greatly improved this year by the addition of a new dock and a palatial dining hall with a combination pantry in the rear. A handsome gasoline stove, the particular pride of Chief Herrington and his right bower Bryan, of cycling fame, Toronto, adds much to the comfort of camp life. Negligee attire is the style most in vogue in camp, although "Jimmie" Dey, lightning-change-artist, aspires to all styles from the kilted garb of the Gael to a bathing costume. "Jimmie" Millan is not English enough to wear a Scotch bonnet but he is a "braw lad for a' that." "Jimmie is the sweet singer of Israel" in Camp Le Nid and is ably assisted by the phenomenal tenor, J. D. Ward, of the Ontario Civil Service, Toronto. When we left them they were busily engaged drilling the glee club, preparatory to taking a prominent part at a garden party at Glen Island. There are only two of the "originals" in attendance at camp this year, and they happen to be members of the legal fraternity by the way, viz: Chief Herrington and the Patrician Gould, of Baltimore. "Jimmie" Dey, who, by-the-way, is also a lawyer, has serious intentions of writing an ode to Herrington and Gould to the tune of "There is only a few of us left," but we sincerely hope that his tent mate, Wm. Bryan, will persuade him to foregot his rash attempt and thereby avert a catastrophe. "Dan" Walsh, of the Dominion Civil Service, Norwich, is always on hand to intercept any contraband goods that the members may endeavor to smuggle into camp. Kernihan, of Toronto, sometimes called "Shorty," is chairman of the reception committee and is always on hand to welcome fresh arrivals. Thad Warner has a sneaking regard for Glen Island and spends considerable time at that charming summer resort. Messrs. Rutherford, Macdonald and Begg, of Toronto, arrived on their wheels Sunday, and T. E. Merritt and others are expected to arrive this week. "The boys" have chartered Snider's yacht for three days in the week, and what with cruising, golf playing, fishing, swimming and shooting, the time flies all too quickly.

No Express next week.

The rate of taxation for Napanee has been placed at 18½ mills for town purposes and 8½ mills for school purposes. This is ½ a mill lower than last year.

be no paper issued from this office ... the usual custom of county newspapers to take a week off once a year—a good old custom which we hope will never be departed from. Our subscribers will endeavor to get along without us for one week, and we will return to the task of getting out a good family journal with renewed vigor on the 17th inst. The job department will remain open for business as usual.

A Picton Wedding.

A quiet wedding took place in Picton on Monday at the residence of the bride's uncle, Mr. J. H. Allen, ex-Mayor of Picton and president of the John H Allan Seed Company. The contracting parties were Mr. Alfred Bennett of the Merchants' Bank, London, and Miss Florence Fraser, only daughter of Mr. Allen M. Fraser, of Napanee. The Rev. Dr. Blackstock, of Toronto was the officiating clergyman. During the three years' residence of Miss Fraser in Picton she made hosts of friends, and the First Methodist Church will lose one of its most active and consistent workers. The happy couple are spending the week in Napanee and will leave for London on Monday.

Death of James Meagher.

We copy the following from the Belleville Sun: "After many years' successful business career one of Belleville's oldest and most respected residents passed away on Sunday night in the person of James Meagher The deceased gentleman was born 70 years ago at Templemore, in the county of Tipperary, Ireland, and came to this country about 1846 and settled in this locality. For several years he and his father worked the farm known as the Le Loyne property, near Albert College. From there they moved to Tyendinaga and were engaged in farming for some time. Mr. Meagher while in Tyendinaga, took up the business of school teaching and for several years was highly successful in his chosen avocation and after a time became one of the pioneer shorthand teachers of Canada." The Sun goes on to say how after retiring from the teaching profession he embarked in the grocery and flour and feed business and carried on an extensive business up to a short time ago when he sold out to Mr. Charles Smith, of Campbellford "Mr. Meagher was" says the Sun, "the first captain of No. 4 company, XV. battalion, A L I. at the organization of the battalion in 1863. He was a member of the town council in 1877, when the town was inaugurated a city. The deceased was widely known and highly respected, not only among business men but by all with whom he had any intercourse. In business he was very successful and the fact that he took hold of any project was the assurance that it would be carried to a successful termination. Socially and personally he was a man whom it was a pleasure to know and to many in this city he was a staunch, true friend. In politics he was always a strong supporter of the Reform party and many of the best articles appearing in the local papers up to a few years ago had his signature appended. He was a prominent member of St. Michael's church. Mr. Meagher was married 21 years ago to Miss Bessie McGurn, of Tyendinaga, who survives him." Deceased leaves three sisters, Mrs. McCormick, of Rochester; Mrs. Wm. Wilkison and Mrs. Brendon, of Meskego, Mich.; and two brothers, John C. of Marysville, and Wm. Henry, of Napanee.

The Reason Why Some Dealers Sell Poor Dyes.

Many ladies who have been deceived by the imitation dyes so often sold by some dealers and druggists, ask the question: "Why will these merchants persist in selling us dyes that are positively worthless?"

This question is easily answered. The dealers who sell these common dyes do so for a very selfish object—big profits. They buy these crude and poisonous dyes for much less than the celebrated Diamond Dyes cost, and they are sold to the ladies at the same price, ten cents per packet. The dealers in this way make long, big profits, while the deceived consumer must suffer loss at every time of using.

Dealers know well that the Diamond Dyes are the only true and warranted colors, but the love of gain is too great to allow them to treat the public honestly.

The ladies can soon compel dealers to do what is honest and right if they insist every time upon getting the Diamond Dyes. You can always find the dealer in your town that is anxious to sell dyes that will give entire satisfaction.

Children at school are often abused and laughed at because of their "dullness," when the whole trouble is imperfect vision; for, although they are perfectly well when at play out-doors and quite well when they take up a book, they cannot continue to read for more than a few minutes at a time. Such children may sooner or later become cross-eyed unless the defect is properly corrected by an eye specialist. A. F. Chinneck is a graduate and will examine any eyes free of charge. F. MAN ABOUT TOWN.

THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL.

A legal dignatary of our town, a few days ago, was put in rather a peculiar predicament. The chief caught a clergyman in the very act of breaking a by-law of the town and went so far as to stop him. The limb of the law did not arrest the divine, he only arrested his means of locomotion. After due consideration the conundrum suggested itself whether a really pious man passing over our sidewalk with the atmosphere above, around and beneath him and the sidewalk could be considered riding his bike on the sidewalk and so breaking the by-law. The supposed offender was given the benefit of the doubt owing to the intervention of a member of the legal profession.

WILL PROHIBITION STOP IT?

Several citizens of Napanee have watched, this fall, the beautiful clusters of grapes on the vines gradually approaching theripeness of sweet maturity. But other eyes have watched the transformation, for frequently the night before the day set for garnering, some spirits, or boys moved by spirits, have passed through the orchard and the result has been that the owner of the vines has no grapes to see. If it were not for the substantial hole generally made in the fence and the foot-tracks up in the grounds through which they pass so rudely and dextrously one would think the grapes had passed into spirit land without the intervention of a wine press. We hope the youth of the town are not contracting an appetite for intoxicants in this manner, for if so, before they are bald-headed men they will need something stronger.

A New Woman at Work.

Miss Beatrix Jones of New York has taken up the art of landscape gardening, and one can often find her arranging earth and giving directions to her two crews of men, who are at work under her direction at Reef Point, her Bar Harbor home. Miss Jones is a young and attractive woman and is full of ambition. She has taken the contract to put the rough grounds of Messrs. W. H. Bliss of New York and Edgar Scott, the young Philadelphia millionaire, in trim for building. The Scott grounds cost $60,000 in their primeval state, and had Miss Jones not shown her cleverness in the new labor for women she would not, of course, have been intrusted with the task.

As Old as Noah.

Mr. Reynolds is a bright and well-preserved old gentleman, but to his granddaughter Mabel he seems very old, indeed. She had been sitting on his knee and looking at him seriously for a long time one day, when she asked, suddenly:

"Grandpa, were you in the ark?"

"Why, no, my dear?" gasped her astonished grandparent.

Mabel's eyes grew large and round with astonishment.

"Then, grandpa," she asked, "why weren't you drowned?"

A farmer in a neighboring township thought he would have a little fun with his 15 year old son by playing ghost. He rigged himself out in a sheet and slowly approached the boy. The lad picked up a chair and went after the ghost. Before he ascertained that it was his father he had broken two of the old man's ribs and otherwise injured him.

The nomination for county councillors will be held this year on Monday, Dec. 21st, two weeks before the first Monday in January, which will be polling day. The Warden will appoint a nominating officer for each district on or before November 15th.

The election of county representatives under thenew act promises to be as interesting as a provincial or general election. Some of the districts are fully as large as the provincial constituencies. By the new act the number of county representatives will be reduced from over 1,400 to 500, at a saving, it is estimated, of over $25,000 annually to the taxpayers. It is claimed by some that the new arrangement will do away with the "Ward system," and that representatives will now work, not for the benefit of their particular townships, but for the good of the whole district.

The discovery by an expert auditor that the city treasurer of Guelph is behind some $18,000 in his cash brings to the front the scheme submitted by Mr. Ferguson, M.P.P. for East Kent, of the appointment by the government of an expert in each county to audit the books of all the municipalities. The cost would be no more than under the system in vogue and the people would have a guarantee that the work was thoroughly done. The Guelph treasurer's defalcations cover a period of over 12 years, and notwithstanding the fact, each year the books were duly audited and certified correct.

It extended to Newbuag last year. Is Odessa shrinking on that side? He should also have added that it was "mean and dishonorable" when beaten to have a scramble for the ball and refuse to give it to the winning team. Probably they thought it was a "fowl." She was attended by Miss Frink, cousin of the groom, who was attir- in blue cashmere and looked beautiful. Mr. John Doyle did the honors for the groom. The nuptial knot was tied at 11 o'clock a.m. in the presence of about thirty guests. Both the bride and groom were made the recipients of many handsome and costly presents, carrying with them the good wishes of the donors. After the ceremony was performed a most elaborate and substantial dinner was served and the evening was spent in music and dancing was indulged in until quite a late hour. The young couple are highly esteemed by one and all and we wish them a long and prosperous wedded life. The presents from the groomsman and bridesmaid were very pretty, Mr. Doyle a lovely flowered set of dishes, and Miss Frink a glass desert dish.

The paper is immersed in wax, stearine and similar substances, and burns with a light, smokeless and odorless flame. Wax For Preserving Timber.

Another method of preserving timber has recently been tried. It consists in dissolving in naptha the heavy oils and waxes left after the distillation of petroleum, and forcing the solution into the seasoned timber in the same manner as in creosoting. The timber is then heated, when the naphtha evaporates, and is recovered in a cooling chamber, while the waxes, etc., remain behind in the wood, waterproofing it.

Kinds Words Come From Public Institutions

As Well As From Private Individuals.

All Classes and Creeds Praise Paine's Celery Compound.

Public institutions throughout Canada are as ready to acknowledge the marvellous virtues of Paine's Celery Compound as are private individuals.

For many years, a large number of our public, benevolent and religious corporations have used Paine's Celery Compound for the benefit of old and young, and if it were possible to publish all the statements made by the inmates, scores of the letters would prove interesting and entertaining.

In institutions like those referred to, where hundreds are cared for every year, all the common ills and diseases of every day life are found, and many hundreds have been made well and strong by Paine's Celery Compound that the physicians of these institutions were unable to cure by the ordinary means.

To-day this grand curing work is still going on in many of the largest and most prominent of our public places, and no other medicine will be tolerated but Paine's Celery Compound, which shows the esteem and confidence in which the medicine is held.

One of the noted institutions that has given testimony for Paine's Celery Compound is the immense conventual educational house on the St. Lawrence, near Montreal, and known as the "Convent of the Holy Names." The ladies of this house write as follows:

"We feel it a duty to add our testimony in favor of your 'wonder-working' Paine's Celery Compound. Many Sisters, suffering from debility, dysyepsia, sleeplessness and indigestion, have been completely relieved after taking it.

"We shall strongly recommend its use in all our houses as the best medicine to restore health, and give tone and vigor to

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher, That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

NAPANEE, FRIDAY SEPT. 18, 1896.

THERE is talk of dethroning the Sultan of Turkey. In the name of the suffering Armenians it can't be done too soon.

THE Globe says the adoption of prohibition in Canada would mean a loss of $7,000,000 of revenue. This has been and will doubtless continue to be a potent factor in retarding legislation of this character.

WE are in receipt of a letter from the Rev. Arthur Jarvis, in which he agrees with us that it would be unwise to admit a controversy upon agnosticism into our columns. For his own part he has no anxiety to enter into such a battle but if is necessary he will not shrink from it.

Mr. Jarvis points out in his letter:

[1] Your resume of the controversy is correct enough except that you state that I wrote to the "World." I did not. All I had to do in the matter was to correct the mis-statement that my choir took part in an agnostic "service." This I did in our own local papers. How it got into the "World" I don't know.

(2) You further credit me with insinuating that Ellis, by giving you the report made use of the sad occasion to advertise himself &c. If you will read my letter you will see that I was referring to his attack on myself not to the notice in THE EXPRESS. It was he who made it unpleasant for the Pringle family by writing that letter for which there was no occasion.

THE EXPRESS desires to be perfectly fair in the matter and as Mr. Jarvis has intimated that with the publication of the above he is satisfied to rest his case we publish the extracts from his letter with the hope that so far as we are concerned the controversy will

GETTING UNWITTINGLY SHARP.

To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.

SIR,—I notice in the daily Intelligencer, of Belleville, of Sept. 2nd, that the editor is getting unwittingly sharp, and forsooth would say for the help of his memory that the Mayor of Belleville is a decendant of the 400 referred to. And if the editor is in any way fit to compare with him as a fine type of nobility he might then give vent to his over balanced caliber to such silly expressions, but when an editor stoops to such uncourteous thoughts, it is time for his plant to be sold out, and go into more wise and better hands.

A VISIT TO THE HOME OF GENERAL NICHOLAS HERKIMER.

AND TO OLD FORT HERKIMER CHURCH NEAR LITTLE FALLS, N. Y.

DEAR EDITOR:—On Tuesday morning, Sept. 1, we hastily prepared for our proposed visit to the old home of General Nicholas Herkimer, of revolutionary fame, and from whom the County of Herkimer, N. Y. derives its name.

Herkimer county is centrally distant from Albany eighty miles, its population is 55,000, and it contains 1,745 square miles. Its surface is a hilly upland with a series of ridges extending in a general north and south direction. Mohawk river flows east at right angles and separates the highland into two distinct parts. The Hasenclever mountains lie along the west border of the county, north of the Mohawk, and from the window before which I pen these lines, I look out over their green, fertile, sloping sides and as far as the eye can reach follow wooded crest after crest; then looking directly down the hill I watch the flashing of the water of West Canada Creek, winding along through a lovely valley. Truly one might travel the world over and not find a more beautiful spot than this—Osborn Hill.

Herkimer is the county town of Herkimer county. It has ten miles of streets, three lines of railways, fifteen manufactories, many handsome public and private buildings and 5,000 inhabitants. The people living here had a village organization and government under a legislative act as early as 1807.

The greatest canal, Erie, and the greatest Railway, of the continent, the New York Central, passes through the Herkimer Hills following the fertile valley of the Mohawk. Herkimer county is historic ground as many of the most stirring events in the great struggle for independence occured within its limits.

But I must hasten. General Herkimer's residence is situated about two and a half miles below the city of Little Falls, on the south bank of the Mohawk. We arrived at noon after a most enjoyable drive. (The scenery below Little Falls is superb. The mountains on each side of the river are masses of naked, variable colored rocks rising perpendicular to a height of 500 to to 600 ft.)

With appetites sharpened by our long drive we greatly enjoyed our little picnic in the grove, discussing at the same time the various events connected with the spot, and as we looked toward the opposite side of the river, within a radius of half a mile we see the West Shore R. R, the Erie Canal, the drive road, Mohawk River, New York Central R. R. and the Dolgeville R. R. all, except the latter, running parallel.

Having finished our repast we first inspected the old powder house over which a barn has been erected. The powder house is built entirely of stone with a vaulted roof. It is about 24 x 15 ft. and 10ft to top of arch. It is in a good state of preservation as is also the General's house with which it is said to be connected by means of a secret underground passage The residence is built of dark red brick imported from Holland about 1764 and cost about $8,000. As the family living in it were at dinner we proceeded to the graveyard situated upon a knoll a short distance southeast of the house. The state has purchased the land in front of the yard and has built a handsome stone wall about the latter place. Men were at work in the yard and a large monument, the dimensions of which I have forgotten is to be erected there this month. The foundation for the stone has been completed, and the stone itself is so large that it has been necessary to build a track from the West Shore R. R. to the yard in order to convey it to the spot where it is to stand in honor of the dead General. At present a plain marble slab marks his grave and bears the following inscription:—

NOT SO VERY RADICAL

THE SWISS INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

The Provisions of the Law in the Small, Liberty-Loving Republic—How They May Be Made Serviceable in the New-World Countries.

The initiative and referendum has found its highest development in Switzerland, especially in the cantons. The Swiss constitution provides that "federal laws shall be submitted for acceptance or rejection by the people if the demand is made by 30,000 voters, or by eight cantons." This is the referendum, by which laws that have been passed by the legislative body must be submitted to the people for approval. The essential point about the initiative is that a certain portion of the voters may petition that a law upon a certain question shall be drafted and presented to the voters for approval or rejection. The Swiss federal constitution does not provide for the initiative in ordinary legislation, but the system is in use for that purpose in some of the cantons, which may be said to correspond to the States of our Union. The initiative may be used, however, for effecting constitutional changes in the federal government. Following is the provision for amending the federal constitution:

"When either council of the Federal Assembly passes a resolution for amendment of the federal constitution and the other council does not agree, or when 50,000 Swiss voters demand amendment, the question whether the federal constitution ought to be amended is, in either case, submitted to a vote of the Swiss people, voting yes or no. If in either case the majority of the Swiss citizens who vote pronounce in the affirmative, there shall be a new election of both councils for the purpose of preparing amendments."

The working of this system in Switzerland and in the cantons composing it has been commended. The results have not been so encouraging to the radical element as many had anticipated. In fact, the Swiss people have shown a decided conservatism and caution whenever laws have been submitted to them under the referendum. The system is particularly suited to the conditions in Switzerland, because that is a small country. Yet, even there, we find it used less in federal than in cantonal affairs. The larger the territory and population the greater the difficulty in putting the system into use. The referendum is best suited to use in local affairs. It may be used to great advantage in state affairs, but it is questionable in this country if it would be wise to adopt the referendum in national affairs, except for submitting constitutional amendments. There is less scope for the use of the initiative than for the referendum and not so urgent reasons for its adoption.

The referendum has been growing in use in this country. Only last year two important measures—the Torrens law and the civil service law—were submitted to the voters of Chicago for mer Merritt, remarkable results, both for IN-[illegible] and EXTERNAL use, and won-as Hanley in its quick action to relieve distress.

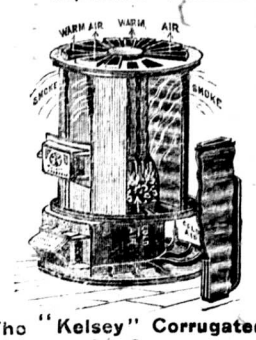
The Most Economical ...House Warmer



The "Kelsey" Corrugated Warm Air Generator.

Any ordinary Hot Air Furnace will produce heat if you will only supply enough fuel. The "Kelsey" has several special and valuable features but most important is that it will give more heat with less fuel and is the most durable heater made.

The "Kelsey" fire pot being constructed of several upright, tubular, corrugated, cast iron sections (see cut) around which the fire passes and up through which the cold air passes while being heated, and this entire section being wrapped with a heavy steel casing which becomes heated by the fire striking it when passing down outside of upright sections towards smoke pipe, it in turn warms the air that passes up between this steel casing and the galvanized iron casing, this explains why the "Kelsey" has three times more radiating surface and warm air capacity than an ordinary Furnace. The "Kelsey" heats every room evenly, wheresoever located, with a nice, mild, healthful warm air that will not injure your furniture.

The "Kelsey" will heat rooms 60 feet distant.

The "Kelsey" does not heat your cellar.

The "Kelsey" is absolutely gas and dust proof.

we are concerned the controversy will cease.

THE Hon. J. W. Longley, Attorney General of Nova Scotia, in an able article on the Silver Question in the September Canadian Magazine points out that the fight in the United States purports to be between silver and gold, but that this is the most superficial view of the real issue. It is really a rising of the masses against the class legislation that is making millionaires of the few and paupers of the many.

The mass of the people perceive that the Democrats are impotent to grant them the relief from the pernicious system of Protection that has fostered combines and monopolies at the expense of the great bulk of the people. Cleveland, who was elected to break down the high tariff designed for the benefit of the privileged few was foiled in his efforts by men within his own ranks who represented the monopolistic class. Every-honest tariff reformer was disappointed and grieved by the utter humiliating failure of the Democratic party to do anything towards striking a blow at the combines. Mr. Longley points out that "The essence of the silver movement is a rebellion against the power of accumulated wealth, which, acquired by special and unfair means, has for years exercised an undue control and over-weening influence. It has controlled Presidents and Congresses. It dictates the utterances of the Press. The pulpit cringes before it. Representing not more than four or five per cent of the population of the United States, it has more real influence in shaping the policy of the nation than eighty per cent of the toiling masses. Under a system of popular government this cannot go on forever. The people will yet rule and this silver movement looks as if they had taken the bit in their mouth, and were resolved to have a great deal to say as to how the nation should be governed. It does not disturb the average silver man to tell him that the free coinage of silver dollars at the ratio to gold of 16 to 1 will injure the national credit and lead to a panic in Wall Street.

That is just what he wants. He believes—and this, of course, is very immoral—that a large portion of the money owed to the creditor class has been unjustly acquired, and he is not worried at the thought that the debt should be paid in silver, even though it is really but fifty-cents on the dollar. The movement for silver is not essentially different from a movement to strike down special privileges, high duties, and land monopolies: but it is more superficially specious and more easily and quickly appeals to the imagination and sympathy of the mass of the people.

It loooks now as if the forces arranged against the new movement were too strong to give it any reasonable chance of success. Wall Street is thoroughly aroused and will spend its millions freely to crush out such a dangerous theory. But the fight is an open and undisguised one. The silver men will point out that they are fighting against these very forces and appeal to the victims of the gold power to protect themselves from their ancient and implacable enemies. Mr. Bryan will have the support of those who are feeling the pinch of poverty—who are conscious of inequality of opportunity in the industrial conditions of the nation, and who would like to see existing conditions uprooted though revolution and a little anarchy were involved in the transition."

bears the following inscription :—

GENERAL
NICHOLAS HERKIMER
DIED
AUG. 17, 1777,

Ten days after the battle of Oriskany, in which engagement he received wounds which caused his death.

The graveyard is about 170 x 180 ft. Returning to the house we first visited the cellar and looked out through the port-holes by means of which the Indians were kept at bay. Entering the house we were conducted through the various apartments, examining the queer little recesses that were formerally used as bed-chambers, we stood within the room in which the General died, which by-the-way is handsomely wainscottad in white pine wrought into neat mouldings and panels. We even visited the garret—the third story—whose great timbers are crossed and braced equal to the iron frame-work of one of the many bridges about here. We looked around for some souvenir of the place, and what do you suppose I secured? A brick from the wall, and surely I could not have procured a more fitting one. It shall occupy an important position among my small collection of old relics. The walls of the house are two feet thick, every second course being laid lengthwise instead of every fifth as is done now-a-days. We had not long to remain here as we wished to visit old Fort Herkimer Church, and though loath to leave, we were obliged to hasten away. We arrived at Fort Herkimer, or Konari as the French called it, about four o'clock. Fort Herkimer Church was erected sometime between the year 1751 and 1753, but previous to this a church, upon the same site was built of logs in 1725. The church is built of stone with great stone braces at each corner. The interior has lately been remodled, the gallery being shut off, the high backed seats cut down, a platform erected etc., in fact it has been considerably modernized and spoiled. The old pulpit, however has not been disturbed and is poised up in the air like a bird-cage with a circular sounding board above it. This is very seldom used now, a modern reading desk upon the platform, being used instead The church was used formerally as a place of refuge and stood within the palisaded walls of the fort. A large door has been walled up, the windows have been changed and the port holes walled up. The old walls of the fort were used in the construction of the Erie Canal. The oldest gravestone to be found in the valley of the upper Mohawk rests against the south side of the church. It is of red sandstone, surcharged with mica and is about three feet in width by six feet in length. It completely covers the grave and bears this inscription :

HERE RESTS THE BODY OF,
JOHN KING, ESQ.
Of the Kingdom of Ireland, Cap't of one of His Majesty's Independent Companies of the Province,
Who departed this life the 20th day of September 1755,
In the 30th year of his age.

It has been said that no other section of country in the United States of like extent, suffered as much from the two wars French and Indian, and the Revolutionary war as did the people of this vicinity.

Concerning the battle of Oriskany in which Gen. Herkimer received his death wounds, I will simply refer any who may feel interested to American History as I feel I have already trespassed too much upon your patience and space.

submitted to the voters of Chicago for approval. There is a growing tendency, and it is a healthy one, to submit such questions to the people. It would be well if provisions were made for submitting important franchise questions to the voters.

There is also a growing fondness for the referendum in state matters. One hundred years ago constitutions generally were adopted and put in force by constitutional conventions without submission to the people. Now there are very few states, indeed, in which constitutional changes can be effected without the sanction of the voters. Such laws, for example, as those for the regulation of the liquor traffic, are frequently submitted to popular vote. In this country, however, such submission is always at the will of the legislative body. The voters can not demand submission of a question to them, as in Switzerland.

Too frequently legislatures in American States cannot be trusted. As a consequence it has been customary to limit their powers by constitution, with the result that in forbidding the legislature to do certain things the people oftentimes have tied their own hands and placed it out of their power to secure by legislation reforms which are badly needed. Here is one field where the increased use of the referendum would be extremely helpful. Instead of enumerating by constitution an ever-increasing number of things which legislatures may not do, it would be better to stipulate that laws might be passed upon these subjects provided they were submitted to the voters and approved.—Chicago Record.

A Home-Made Barometer.

There is no reason why every boy should not possess a barometer of his own, which he will find not only exceedingly useful in planning his little holiday trips, but which will afford him infinite interest as well.

All he has to do is to take a gramme each of camphor, saltpeter and ammonia salts and dissolve them in about thirteen drams of alcohol. When the dissolution is complete, shake the mixture well and pour it into a glass bottle, one rather long for its width is preferred. Cork tightly and seal with wax so as to prevent the air from penetrating into the bottle.

Expose this improvised barometer on the outside of the window, on the north side of the house, if possible, and the crystallizations which are produced announce a change in the weather.

Absolute clearness of the liquid denotes fair weather.

If the liquid becomes disturbed or roily as we say, it is a sign of rain.

If downy masses form in the bottom of the bottle it will freeze, or at least, the thermometer will descend; the more the masses rise toward the top, the more rigorous will the cold become.

Little stars in the liquid foretell a cold storm.

SEPTEMBER.

We are drinking the wine of the ages,
From cups that are brimming over
With the sweet of a honey unbought with money,
Distilled from the heart of the clover.

The flowers afringe on the way-side
Are in raiment of purple and gold;
To the rough-hewn edge of the old stone ledge
The clinging brier-vines hold.

We are breaking life's fine elixir
In the waft of the perfumed breeze,
The sudden showers, the sunlit hours,
The rustle of leaves on the trees.

The fathomless blue of the heaven,
The beauty and bloom of the day,
Are making us young—they are waking the tongue
Of the years that have passed away.

'Tis the radiant, rare September,
With the clusters ripe on the vine,
With scents that mingle in spicy tingle
On the hill slope's glimmering line.

And summer's a step behind us,
And autumn's a thought before,
And each fleet sweet day that we meet on the way
Is an angel at the door.

Bismarck as a Joker.

The following incident in the life of the iron chancellor recently appeared in one of the New York papers:

"Bismarck and a friend, after a heavy day's shooting, sat together sipping their wine and comparing notes of their day's adventures. Bismarck's friend complained that he was excessively tired and would be unable to get up at 7 o'clock the next morning to join the sport. Bismarck assured him that he would see that he got up at the right time, whether he would or not.

"On retiring to their bedrooms, which adjoined each other, he barred and barricaded his door to prevent Bismarck from carrying out his threat.

"At half-past 6 on the following morning the chancellor knocked at the door, calling on his friend to get up. His friend didn't, but turned on his pillow to enjoy another snooze. Then Bismarck seized his gun, went into the yard and fired through the window of his friend's bed room, hitting the ceiling above the bed and bringing a shower of plaster down on the head and shoulders of the sleeper.

"In the greatest alarm, his friend arose and looked out of the window to see what was the matter. Seeing nobody, he hastily donned his clothes and ran down stairs. Here he met Bismarck, who gravely bade him 'good morning,' and added: 'I hope you slept well; it is just striking 7.'"

BULL BLOOD-THIRST.

SPANISH LITERATURE AS INDICATIVE OF IT AS A FIGHT ITSELF.

Eleven Spanish Publications Devoted Exclusively to Bull Fighting—Flaring Pictures of the Hideous National Sport.

A correspondent who has recently been traveling in Spain, Portugal, Maderia and the Spanish inslands has just sent to a New York Press writer several numbers of a paper called La Lidia, which is published in Madrid, and is one of about eleven publications in Spain which are devoted to the subject of bull fighting. It is illustrated with flaring pictures of the hideous national sport. Gaudily dressed picadores, banderilleros, chulos and matadors; horses with blood pouring from gashes in their obdomens and with bowels protruding; maddened bulls with decorated darts sticking in their bleeding hides; an audience delighted at the sight of the blood and, last scene of all, gayly caparisoned horses dragging away by means of a sort of tackle the mortally wounded bull.

Perhaps the most significant of all the florid illustrations in La Lidia is one covering a double sheet and showing as the central medallion of an allegorical representation an arena containing a gored horse, some men and a bull being infuriated with the red flag. This medallion is decorated with red and gold, and the green palm leaf as a border, and is surmounted by a shield on which the cross is blazoned and on which rests the royal crown of Spain. At the base of the picture is an immense bull's head decorated with all the adjuncts of the ring, and with a large arena in the distance.

Above it are seated the typical peasants, flower decorated and with musical instruments. Above this, on the left are the emblems of art, sculpture and music; on the right the emblems of science and mechanic arts; and as the climax of absurdity, near the top of the picture, a winged figure of fame blowing a blast of victory from a trumpet from which waves the national flag, and holding in her right hand the laurel wreath.

The correspondent referred to draws a comparison between Maderia and the neighboring Canary islands, under Spanish rule, which is unfavorable to the latter. Teneriffe is a veritable Hell for animals. In Lisbon so much general cruelty was not observable as in Madrid (where a society which once existed to protect animals has now existed to protect animals has now been extinct eight years), but he quotes from the Diario de Noticias de Lisbon an extract from the letter of one who signs himself (most appropriately) "John the Devil," which argues the necessity for the killing of bulls and horses in reality instead of baiting sham fights and only accidentally killing the bull, as has been somewhat the custom there. Bull fighting is on the increase in Lisbon. The new bull ring in that city cost $150,000, and seats 11,000 people.

The horses used in the Madrid bull fights come mostly from the army and constabulary forces, and were once first-class animals. The Government requires tall horses, and they are also greater favorites in the bull ring, as the populace is not so well satisfied if the bulls cannot get their horns under them to rip them open properly. This is one of the main attractions. A strong bull can impale a horse on his horns, lift him and throw him. Such is the disposition engendered by these sights that a Spanish lady who had attended one was heard by another informant of the present writer complaining because she had seen a bull which was too cowardly to rip the horse open as he should!

Nansen's Exploit.

Frithlof Nansen has failed to reach the North Pole, but he has performed the most remarkable exploit in the history of modern arctic exploration, says the New York Journal. He has made a longer advance at a single stride than all his predecessors put together for nearly three hundred years. In 1607 Hendrik Hudson reached the neighborhood of 82 degrees north latitude. For two hundred and seventy five years the world's explorers struggled to better that record, and mile by mile they pushed their way northward with suffering and death dogging their footsteps until, on May 13, 1882, Lockwood and Brainerd, of the Greely expedition, planted their flag 83 degrees 24 minutes. A degree and a half in two hundrd and seventy-five years of effort. Lockwood and Brainerd beat the best previous record by only three miles, and yet their achievement has been the admiration of the world ever since. It has stood untouched for fourteen years, and now all at once Nansen has advanced the standard of exploration nearly two hundred miles at a leap. He has gone to latitude 86 degrees 14 minutes—nearly twice as far beyond Lockwood and Brainerd as they went beyond Hudson. He has covered nearly half the distance that remained to be traveled to the pole. Between Nansen's furthest point and that ultimate goal of endeavor there is a gap of only 226 geographical or 263 statute miles.

Although Nansen's theory about the drift of a current across the Pole may not have been correct, he has proved that the plan of his voyage was not as foolhardy as it seemed. He cut loose from bases of supply and allowed his ship to be locked in the ice, to be carried wherever the drift might take it. That this scheme has accomplished twice as much in the way of progress as all the arduous explorations of nearly 300 years, and has done it apparently without the loss of a single life is a fact that the critics will find it hard to dispose of.

Banana Pie.

Beat the yolks of two eggs very light with one cup of crumbled cake, a half cup of sugar, butter the size of a walnut and a little rich cream. Flavor with lemon or vanilla, then stir in two large bananas, cut in thin slices, pour the mixture into a pie pan lined with good paste and bake in a quick oven. While it is baking beat the whites of two eggs very light with a little rose-water and three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar. Take out the pie, drop the meringue in clots over the top of it and set back in the oven until it is a pale brown.

A LONDON RUM SHOP.

DEGRADED MEN AND WOMEN SEEN IN "THE PRINCESS ALICE."

A Faithful Description of One Saturday Night Reads Like the Product of a Diseased Imagination—Drink the Sole Object of the Unfortunates.

The promoters of the rum-shops of East London have some nice-sounding names for the dives in which manhood and womanhood are hourly perishing. One of the most loathsome dens, situated at Commercial and Wentworth-streets, in the Whitechapel district, is called "The Princess Alice." A place almost as bad, standing near the north entrance to Tower Bridge, bears the title of "The Angel." These resorts are beyond adequate portrayal in words. They are so thoroughly and frightfully wicked, so utter and infamously low, that anything like a faithful description of them would read like the product of a diseased imagination.

Saturday nights at "The Princess" witness wholesale carnivals of drunkenness. At these times the compartments are crowded almost to suffocation, and the wretches gathered there struggle with one another for precedence at the bar. They are not all men by any means. Oftener they are more than half women. The latter not infrequently have a child or two with them. It is a mere commonplace to see dissolute mothers, the suggestion of every virtue obliterated from their faces, feeding their little girls ale or beer on the counters of this scandalous den. The men and women all crowd in together, and swill liquor like hogs. Their dress without exception is the dress of desperate poverty. The men wear an infinite variety of hats, clothes and shoes, but none of them has any article of apparel but that is green with age and heavy with filth. Their faces are blotched, distorted and unshaven, and their eyes bear witness to awful eras of sleeplessness and dissipation. They drink until their money is exhausted, or until they can scarcely stand, when these creatures is as poor as it can be. It seldom rises above rags, and very dirty rags at that. It is harrowing enough to witness the debauchery of the younger women, but when one sees an old dame with gray hair and furrowed face—a woman whose appearance shows that she is somebody's mother—sees her drunk and maudlin, staggering from the lethal portals of "The Princess Alice," without a friend, a penny, or a home he is apt to ask in agony of heart, "Is Christ really risen?"—Ed. P. Bell, in Indianapolis News.

conditions

In some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is rapid. For this reason we put up a 50c. size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children.

In other conditions gain must be slow, sometimes almost imperceptible, health can't be built up in a day. For this Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment, food rather than medicine, food prepared for tired and weak digestions.

H. B. SHERWOOD Superintendent of drink they can scarcely stand, when they go out of their own accord, or are forced out and stagger away with maudlin mutterings. When the crowds in "The Princess" are great, one may see a man, in advanced stages of intoxication, braced against the wall half asleep, held from falling by the crush about him. Sometimes he loses consciousness entirely, and goes down in a head. Then the bartender clears the compartment sufficiently to drag the wretch to the sidewalk. A policeman comes along, wakes the offender up, and, if he can walk, starts him off. If he is past walking, the officer calls for the wagon and sends him in.

The chief horror of "The Princess Alice," however, is presented in the degradation of its female clientele. In America the majority of drunkards, especially outside the large cities, are men. In Liverpool and London, according to the statistics of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, there are about six drunken women to one drunken man, and casual observation would indicate this proportion to be true. At "The Princess Alice," the spectacle of the fall of woman is complete. When the mind oscillates from the purest and loviest type of the diviner part of God's noblest work to the creature of the same sex that frequents this rum-shop, it sweeps the infinite! One cannot think intently of the two side by side—so definitely and violently antithetic are they—without experiencing a shock to his reason. The chasm is greater than the human intellect can span and not suffer a strain. At a given time, it must rest wholly on one side or wholly on the other.

The females of "The Princess Alice" are not necessarily habitues of resorts. Many of them are mothers that the curse of drink has caused to forget every obligation of motherhood and home. Many of them are little past girlhood and yet are one stage lower, in the classification that slum life imposes, than the so-called "respectable" inmates of resorts. In the course of their fall, they have probably stopped for a time on the level of the less depraved, but drink would not permit them to remain there. It has dragged them still lower. It has made them such beasts that the doors of the resorts are closed against them, and the inmates of such places have come to feel that there is a depth of social decay above which even they stand, as on an eminence. Drink is the overmastering passion of these outcasts. They seem to have no other passion, no other pleasure, no other concern, of any sort whatever. Numbers of them know nothing about home life, nothing of affection, nothing of any one of the fundamental humanities. The appetite for drink possesses and consumes them; it causes them to lie and cheat, to beg and steal; any form of inquity is welcome if it only holds out the promise of a quantitiy of rum. Like that of the men, the dress of the season, Luella?

"Not if we have winter weather again. That's the beauty of having a grate."

"I'm not cold."

"Neither am I, for that matter, but you know how cheerful a grate fire looks on a cool evening; it lights up the whole street."

"Then it is for the benefit of our neighbors? I wish one of them would kindle it! If there is one thing I hate more than another it's going into the basement to hunt kindling and getting my hair full of cobwebs."

"Well, Philander, its Sunday night and the girl is out and either you or I will have to kindle that fire."

Mr. Skidmore went off grumbling and cut the kindling. He also bruised his nose badly by a back-handed kick of the ax, and brushed down half a hundred cobwebs looking for the excelsior lighting pads. But he made the fire, while Mrs. Skidmore sat in a rocker and bossed the job. And when it had burnt down to a clear coal blaze that shone out on the street like a beacon light, he felt the satisfaction of a heroic deed accomplished, and looked at his wife for approval. Coincident with that look his wife gave a wild scream.

"My diamonds! My diamonds!"

"Stolen?" asked her husband in alarm.

"No! no! Worse! Burned up in the fire. I hid them in the grate!"

"It's too late to save them now," he said as his wife tore the coals apart.

"Never mind, Luella, I will buy you new ones."

"I don't want new ones!" she cried. "I want my rings and pins and ornaments that are dear from association! Oh, how stupid of me not to remember they were there!"

"I think it was more stupid to ever put them there. However, I will forgive you on one condition, and what is more to the purpose, replace them. Promise that you will never again ask me to make a grate fire!"

"I never want you to make one for me after this exploit, Mr. Skidmore."

"Then here are your diamonds. I fished them out just as the fire started, but you can thank your lucky stars they were not reduced to their original carbon. Put them in the ash barrel the next time."

But Mrs. Skidmore declared there would be no next time, for she would hereafter wear her diamonds even if she resembled a mountain of light.—Detroit Free Press.

Must Be No Printing There.

"Ah!" he whispered, "I will print a kiss upon your lips."

She started affrightedly.

"Heavens!" she said, with a gesture of deprecation; "somebody would be sure to read my face!"—Detroit Tribune.

THE SCIENTIFIC WORLD

BASIC STEEL RAILS.

An Austrian Scientist Proves the Metal to Be Valuable.

The use of basic steel rails having a year or two ago been prohibited on the Austrian State Railways, Professor Tetmajer, of the Polytechnic School of Zurich, Switzerland, published a paper in which he defended the use of such rails. The action of the Austrian Government was due largely to two lots of inferior rails having been furnished by a German company. On the representation of the officers of a large basic Bessemer steel plant the Government appointed a commission to investigate the matter (the firm referred to selecting two members), and as a result of this investigation the order was reversed, although basic rails are still required to show a tensile strength of 71,000 pounds per square inch, while for ordinary Bessemer rails a tensile strength of only 66,800 pounds is required.

Since 1878 the basic process has developed rapidly. In 1880 only 50,000 tons were made, while in 1893 the output was 3,638,556 metric tons, of which about 20 to 25 per cent. was made by the basic open-hearth process. The metal is said to meet with a steadily increasing application in the construction of bridges and railways all over the continent of Europe and England. As one of the principal objections made to basic steel has been the alleged irregularity of its composition, Professor Tetmajer gave in his paper a number of analyses showing that great regularity is actually obtained in the output of many large works and referred to the value of the Darby and Meyer recarburization process in this connection, and also states that the basic Bessemer boiler plates of the Peine works compete successfully with the best brands of Siemens-Martin steel.

Returns from the state railways of Finland and Hungary showed that the wearing quality of basic Bessemer rails is above the general average, in some cases showing a decided superiority. The renewals of defective rails are also less than with acid rails. From the information collected, Professor Tetmajer concluded that basic Bessemer rail steel can be made with great regularity in its composition and free from oxygen and red shortness, and also that by the application of the Darby and Meyer recarburization processes any grade of hardness can be easily and regularly obtained.

Straightening a Chimney.

The straightening of a chimney stack at a brick and tile works located at Earnest, Pa., was recently accomplished in a novel manner. According to a description published in the Engineering News the stack is 122 feet high, 11 feet square at the base, tapering somewhat at the top, and weighs 400 tons. The walls are 36 inches thick. The top was found to be leaning 45 inches from the vertical line. To right the chimney 10 1-2 inches of brick work was removed from the foundations on three sides. As the brick were removed, square blocks of wood were inserted one after another until three sides of the structure rested on the blocks. Between the blocks substantial brick piers, six inches high, were built, leaving a space four and a half inches between the top of the piers and the bottom of the undermined brick work. The blocks were then set on fire and kept burning evenly. If one burned faster than the others the fire on that particular block was checked so that all were made to burn uniformly and as the blocks were reduced to ashes the stack slowly righted. As the top gradually swung back through the 45 inch arch small fissures appeared near the base. In every groove a steel wedge was driven to maintain the weight of the walls. The entire work consumed one day.

A condition forlorn.

Has Been a Woman.

"Major, if you don't punish that boy I will!"

The words fell sternly from the lips of Mrs. Domo, who was ruefully surveying the wreck of her best reading lamp.

"Bob!" said the major, severely, "come here. Mariah, leave the room!"

Mrs. Domo went into the dining room and shut the door to keep out the horrid sounds.

"Whack! Whack! Whack!" from the major.

"Wow! O, wow! I won't do it again!" from the boy.

"Whack! Whack! Whack! Now, will you break lamp shades, you young whelp of Satan?"

"No—o! No—o!" sobbed Bobby.

"Whack! Whack! Whack!"

Mrs. Domo's ire by this time was quite evaporated.

Again that dreadful slipper fell, and again the air was rent with the yells of tortured innocence.

"O, major, stop!"

"Not by a jugful. We're having a splendid time in here, Whack! Whack! Whack!"

Mrs. Domo could stand it no longer. "Stop it, you big brute!" she exclaimed, rushing into the apartment.

Then she grew madder than ever. There on his hands and knees was the major galloping around on the carpet, while Bobby was larruping a slipper and giving vent to terrified cries of woe.—Chicago Dispatch.

On Awkward Mashers.

"These short bicycle skirts are certainly a great leveler," said the South Side man as he looked out of the car window at a passing wheelwoman. "Especially for a somewhat nearsighted man," he somewhat irrelevantly added. Then he sighed as if at some passing recollection and presently continued:

"Early last evening I was walking near my home when a passing wheel-

MARS.

It may be there are forms of human life
Upon old continents of shrouded stars;
It may be there are men grown mad with strife
Among the fields and woods and hills of Mars.

Some day perhaps we shall look on the face
Of one who dwells within that sister sphere,
And wonder if his soul has sweeter grace
Than any soul of ours that sorrows here;

If he has loved as we may love, in vain;
If he has strived in cruel coils of hate;
If loss with him has been the end of gain;
If he has learned to live—and learned too late.

Yet it may be that this new brother dwells
In ways more gentle than terrestrial ways,
That night brings peace to him and halcyon spells,
That dawns are harbingers of golden days;

And it may be that he is patient, brave,
Fraternal, yet forgiving, strong yet meek,
And that his world is like the dream we crave,
Like some Utopia we divinely seek.

THE TIME OF ROSES.

"Why have you so persistently avoided me ever since—since—well, since Lady Barkston's garden party?" I inquired of Miss Windram so soon as I succeeded in elbowing my way through the dead wall of Mrs. Bennett Wyse's guests who stood between us. The result of a brief calculation, entered on the next morning, was to convince me that, during the six minutes it took me playing the part of a pick in order to reach Miss Windram, I made as many enemies as I had made during the 30 years of my life preceding Mrs. Bennett Wyse's "at home."

"Have I avoided you, Mr. Glyn?" she asked, opening her eyes very wide and (but this was doubtful) very innocently.

"The question is not if you have done it, but why you have done it," I said, with some severity.

"Suppose I deny that is the question," she suggested, quite pleasantly, though without quite such a show of innocence as had been associated with her previous inquiry. It is quite possible to speak pleasantly without any particular exuberance of innocence.

"Suppose you deny it? Well, in that case you will have—have denied it," said I. "But it so happens that you won't deny it, Miss Windram."

"I'm not so sure of that. If anyone would make it worth my while I might."

"No one will make it worth your while. There is nothing left for you but to speak the truth."

"Great heavens! Is it come to that?"

"Why have you avoided me? We were good friends up to that day—I have put a blue mark opposite that day in my diary."

"Yes, we were good friends; good friends are those who have a sound quarrel every time they meet, I suppose?"

"Precisely; friends whose friendship is strong enough to survive a quarrel."

"Did we quarrel that day?"

"We certainly did not. Where would society be if a man and a young woman quarreled because, when he asked her—"

"Is there any need for you to tell everyone in this stifling room what one problematically foolish young man asked a certainly idiotic young woman?"

I felt that there was something in her question. I had not, however, been speaking louder than usual; it only seemed so because of a sudden momentary diminutive in the volume of sound proceeding from the 200 guests of Mrs. Bennett Wyse, who had all been speaking at the same moment. I tried to explain this to her, and then she asked me what I thought of Signora Duse as an interpreter of emotion as compared with Mme. Sara Bernhardt, and if I held that an actress who was an admirable exponent of the strongest emotions might be depended on to interpret the most powerful passions.

"It is a nice question," I felt bound to say. "Let us clear out from this ruck and I think I'll be able to tell you

Of ill health, despondency and despair, gives way to the sunshine of hope, happiness and health, upon taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, because it gives renewed life and vitality to the blood, and through that imparts nerve strength, vigor and energy to the whole body. Read this letter:

There is no pleasure in life if deprived of health, for life becomes a burden. Hood's Sarsaparilla does far more than advertised. After taking one bottle, it is sufficient to recommend itself." MRS. wish. The public are invariably idiots, the editor of the Universe announced in connection with that book of mine. He was right, though the fact that the public steadily refuse to buy the Universe, points in the other direction."

"Oh, it's all very well to try and throw the blame on the public," said Miss Windram, with a shrug, "but is that quite generous of you, Mr. Glyn?"

"Perhaps it isn't. Was it on account of the book you avoided me so carefully?"

"Oh, there were other things. The Geographical Society gave you a gold medal, didn't they?"

"They were right there. They couldn't get out of it."

"I daresay. That may be all very well, but people who get gold medals conferred on them can't expect to be treated as ordinary people."

"I suppose you are right. But do they want to be treated as ordinary people?"

"That's quite a side issue. I decline to discuss it."

"And that's all?"

"All? all? Heavens! what did you expect?"

"Sense—that is, a moderate amount of sense; reason—that is, a modicum of reason; frankness—that is, a soupcon of frankness. Supper? oh, let them go to—to supper."

And she let them.

We were left practically alone.

"Are you engaged to any man for supper?" I asked of Miss Windram.

"Yes," she replied. I believed that I detected a mournful tone. If I had not detected that note I would have left her side.

"And I am engaged to some woman. Let us go to some place together," said I.

curious incident in train operating, says* Locomotive Engineering. A through fast freight train arrived at London and one of the cars while being switched left the track. On examination it was found that the derailment was caused by one of the wheels having no tire. When a search for the missing tire was instituted it was found about 100 miles away. The car had run that distance without a tire. The most curious thing about the case was that the wheels were tapped and examined several times during the journey. This can be paralleled in this country by an incident on the New Jersey Central Railroad. A driver of an express train was flagged at Bergen Point, seven miles from New York—which distance was run at the rate of 50 miles per hour—and upon examination it was discovered that one of the forward truck wheels was gone entirely. The driver did not know it until told, but some one at a way station had noted the absence of the wheel and telegraphed to hold the train at Bergen Point, only a few miles further on.

Irrigation Beds and Health.

A German physician investigated the truth of the statement that irrigation beds are open to the susoicion of spreading infective diseases. He investigated the health of those persons living near the Berlin irrigation beds, which are the largest of the kind in the world. He says: "The irrigation beds have either caused no disease, or but slight disease amongst the persons living near and working upon them." He further says that properly managed irrigation beds are no source of danger to health, and that "up to the present they are by far the best method of dealing with the sewage of towns." The method is not complete, since it does not lead to the destruction of all pathogenic micro-organisms, as was at first expected. Drain water may contain bacilli of typhoid, etc., and therefore ought not to pass on the beds without previous disinfection.

THE CHIEF ENGINEER.

The "Empress of India's" Chief Engineer Tells an Interesting Story.

Mr. Francis Somerville, one of the best known men in the steamboat traffic on the rivers and lakes of Ontario, having been engaged in this business for fifty years, and who resides at No. 195 Upper Colborne Street, Kingston, speaks as follows of his recovery from the sickness which has affected him for some time.

Said Mr. Somerville: "The grip left me with kidney troubles and gravel. I had severe pain over the kidneys and in the small of my back, also between the shoulders and in the bladder.

"The urine was very dark-colored with a great deal of muddy sediment. I went to Mr. McLeod's drug store and bought two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. I have taken them with what people tell me is the usual good result.

"They have cleared the urine, removed the sediment, relieved me of distressing pain in the back and between the shoulders, and have built me up in a surprising manner. In fact, I am entirely free from the troubles which affected me before taking these remarkable pills, and I recommend them as a certain cure for all troubles arising from kidney disorders."

near my home when a passing wheelwoman just ahead of me attracted my attention. She was trim and neat and dressed in excellent taste. Her gray skirt just reached where her boot tops would ordinarily have been.

She wore very high and nicely rounded tan shoes, however, and her feet and ankles looked decidedly trim and shapely. She wasn't riding, but had her wheel on the sidewalk, pushing it along. The vision was such a charming one, from the Tam o' Shanter hat to the very boot heels, that I lingered a little. Then I braced up and hurried past. Just as I did so a familiar voice called:

"Why, George, is that you? Didn't you know me?"

"Why, no, I didn't honestly," I replied and felt like rubbing my eyes.

"That's awfully good," said the trim wheelwoman, with a merry laugh. "I was just going over to show Nellie my new wheel, and my new suit."

"Say, what do you think?"

"It was my mother-in-law, aged 57."

His Fatal Blunder.

"Beautiful one," he said, "can't you forgive me? I will try to live it down. I will become great for your sake, and make the world envy you as my wife."

"No," the fair girl replied, and there was a resolute ring in her voice, "it cannot be, I must respect the promise that I made to my mother upon her death bed."

He knelt at her feet and looked beseechingly up at her unmindful of the fact that the flies were congregating in droves upon his person.

"Jean," he groaned, "do not leave me out here alone. I cannot. I will not give you up. It would kill me. You are the only one I ever loved! You are the only one I ever can love. Say that you will recall the words that you have just spoke—I mean spoken—"

"Ah," she interrupted, "there it is again! No, no, a thousand times no! It must not be! I am sorry for you, but we are not in the same class. I hope that some day you may find another who will make you happy."

Then she bounded lightly over the fence and started on a dog trot back toward Boston, while the young man laid his cheek upon an ant hill and wept.

He was from Buffalo, and ten minutes before he had said: "I done it."—Cleveland Leader.

Wide Awake.

A Georgia preacher, finding the weather too warm, pulled off his coat and preached in his shirt sleeves. After the sermon a good brother, thinking an editor who was present would make a sensation of the incident, said to the parson:

"I don't suppose you knew, when you pulled off your coat to-day, that one of them newspaper fellows was in meeting?"

"Yes, I did," replied the preacher, "but I had my eye on it all the time!"

ruck and I think I'll be able to tell you all that I know regarding the higher emotions. These people are not to be depended on; one minute they are talking fortissimo, the next they are pianissimo."

"Would you have them rehearsed, Mr. Glyn?"

"Well, a good deal might be done by judicious stage management."

"And a conductor with an ivory baton? There's something in that, I admit. Your idea is that they should become forte when you are speaking, so as to afford a sort of background for your wisdom?"

"Wisdom? What man with the least pretense to wisdom would come into a crowd like this for the sake of talking to a girl who has persistently avoided him for the past year and a month?"

"What man, indeed?"

"And this brings us back to the original question. Why have you so persistently avoided me?"

I could see that she was a trifle put out by my persistence in returning to the topic which had originated with me. She had apparently found some imperfection in the feather tips of her fan, and thought that it would be unwise to neglect the opportunity of pulling off the uneven fluffs. Some of them settled upon my waistcoat, where I allowed them to repose undisturbed; a few made a bee-line for the cavernous nostrils of our neighbor, Gen. Firebrace. He sneezed with considerable force of character.

"Well, you see, so many things have happened since May 3 last year, Mr. Glyn," said Miss Windram, when she had satisfied herself by the repeated opening and closing of her fan that she had remedied the defect in its construction.

"What things—in addition to your avoidance of me?" I asked.

"Well, you have published a book, to begin with. Isn't that something?" she said.

"If we avoid all the people who have published a book, our circle of acquaintance would become appreciably narrowed, Miss Windram. Anything else?"

"Hasn't it gone into six editions?" she cried, in a tone of accusation.

"I don't deserve the blame for that," said I, in a way that was meant to show her I felt the injustice of her accusation. "Blame the public, if you

"Isn't it enough? You're a man. You know her."

"She is one of my dearest friends—now."

"Ah—now."

"Now, I said now. But a year ago—"

"And a month."

"And a month. If you hadn't remembered the exact date I should probably be at supper just now. A year and a month ago she was my one enemy. She knew that I loved you—yes, a year and a month ago I loved you in a sort of way—not the way I do now; and she knew that you loved me—in a sort of way. She commanded you to keep me at a distance. Your mother is not a woman of genius, but upon occasions she can be quite as disagreeable as though she were. She prefers, however, being disagreeable by deputy. You were her deputy, a year ago—and a month."

Miss Windram got up from beside me and took a few steps to the side of the conservatory, up which a splendid rose was clambering. She had had her eyes fixed on a spray. It would have been out of the reach of most girls, but she was very tall, and she managed to break it off the parent stem.

The light shone upon the white flesh of her round arms. Surely no living woman had such lovely arms.

She returned to her seat.

"Well?" she said.

"Then my poor uncle—"

"Poor?" She gave a laugh.

"My poor rich uncle died, leaving his money to me, and your mother told you that you were to draw me on. I could swear that those were her exact words. Did you pluck those roses only to tear off their petals?"

One rose lay wrecked at her feet. The other dropped from her hand and lay complete among the crimson flakes. She put her hand before her face.

"But instead of drawing me on, you persistently avoided me, and, in fact, did everything that was in your power to make me believe that you were sincere when you told me, at the command of your mother, that you had never heard anything more ridiculous than my suggestion that we should love each other; and that you hoped I would not think it necessary to repeat anything so absurd. You have failed in your aim, Rosamund; you did not make me believe in your sincerity. Was I right?"

I am certain that she gave a sob, but she did not take her hands down from her face.

"Look at your feet," I said suddenly. She was startled, and glanced down quickly. (Her gloves, I perceived, were ruined.) "Look at your feet. Which is to be my future—our future—our future, Rosamund? Which— The wrecked rose or the other?"

She picked up the complete rose and handed it to me.

I kissed it and then fastened it as well as I could in the front of her dress. The crimson petals lay upon her shell-pink flesh—it was shell-pink now where it had been white before.

And then—

Then a man came up and said that we would do well to hurry into the supper room if we wanted a bite of anything.

I wanted something, but it was not supper.—Black and White.

John Brown's Grave.

John Brown's grave having been purchased with his farm, on which it stands, by the John Brown Association and by them presented to the state, a number of persons assembled there on July 21 to attend the ceremony of unveiling a monument to the memory of John Brown and his son Watson, and the erection of a flag pole sixty-three feet high to support the large flag presented by Colonel Lyman. A touching incident on the occasion was the singing of the historic hero's favorite hymn, "Blow Ye Trumpets, Blow," by an old negro who was one of the slaves brought to the farm by the "underground route," in the ante-bellum days.

Mr. Laurier on Whiskey.

It has just leaked out that the Bar in the House of Commons was closed not for political thunder or to pull the wool over the eyes of the temperance people. Mr. Laurier found that to hold the fort he must have a sound, healthy, clear-headed party and therefore decided that intoxicants of every description must go and that every Reformer must stop drinking whiskey, tea and coffee and take nothing but Madden cereal, the hot food drink.

His Barn Burned.

George Gowdy, Camden, lost his barn by fire on Friday afternoon. He lost everything in it except a seeder and wagon. He was excavating under the barn for a stable and had put in a blast, covering it as he thought securely, but a piece of the fuse must have reached some straw for in a few minutes they noticed straw on fire. Having no water on hand helpers endeavored to smother it, burning their hands thereby. It could not be overcome and in a few minutes the barn was a mass of flames.

A Correction.

We owe an apology to our Tamworth correspondent, who is noted for the reliability of his news. In last week's EXPRESS we made him say: "Mr. Patrick Way has bought a farm in Storington," while the following is what he wrote: "Mr. Patrick Way has bought James York's farm; Jas. Wedding Bells.

An interesting event took place on Wednesday evening, the 16th inst., at the residence of Wm. Wild, Esq., Camden, it being the marriage of his youngest daughter, Miss Francis L. Wild, to Mr. Jas. Russell, of South Fredericksburgh, second son of Mr. John Russell, of the Township of Richmond. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. Limbert, of Selby, in the presence of a large number of the relatives of the contracting parties. After the usual greeting the guests repaired to the dining room and did ample justice to the elaborate wedding feast.

Deserted His Wife.

Ebenezer Bartels left town "without beat of drum," taking his child by his first wife with him, and leaving the woman, to whom he was married but a few months ago, with out money, food or furniture, as he removed all the household effects before he levanted. It is said that the goods are stored in Richmond township with a man who helped in their removal. The only reason the deserted wife can give for her abandonment is that she had no money when she married Ebenezer, and he thought she had. Mrs. Bartels, who is a very respectable woman, was for two years previous to her marriage in the employment of Mrs. John McCullough, Dundas street, as a domestic.—Deseronto Tribune.

Death of Mrs. Kouber.

It is with feelings of deep regret that we are called upon to chronicle the death of Mrs. Kouber, wife of V. Kouber, marble cutter, which occurred suddenly at the Hotel Dieu, Kingston, on Saturday morning last, about 10 o'clock. Mrs. Kouber entered the Hotel Dieu on Thursday of last week to have a tumor, from which she had suffered for a number of years, operated upon. She was unable to bear up under the operation and passed away on Saturday last. Her husband was with her during the trying ordeal and at the time of her death. The remains were conveyed to Napanee on Saturday afternoon and the funeral took place from the R. C. church on Sunday. Mrs. Kouber, whose maiden name was Jennie Thompson, was esteemed and beloved by her large circle of acquaintances for her many good qualities and kindliness of heart. She was a great friend of the sick and was highly spoken of as a neighbor. She was 47 years of age, and her bereaved husband and two children, Beatrice and Vincent, will have the sympathy of all in their affliction. Deceased was a devout member of the Catholic church, having embraced that faith after her marriage, and the funeral from the Roman Catholic church on Sunday to the R. C. cemetery was largely attended, testifying to the respect and esteem in which the departed lady was held.

sort of the congregation. The new seats are of handsome manufacture and are set in a semi-circular fashion. The floor has been newly carpeted and a handsome new pulpit has been erected. The windows are all new with the exception of the large ornamental centre window facing Bridge street. Mrs. Doxsee has presented the church with a beautiful memorial window in memory of her late husband. The window occupies the west side of the edifice and adds much to its appearance. The old fashioned gallery has been taken away entirely and its abolishment is a decided improvement. The painting and kalsomining is artistic and beautiful and the church is very complete and pretty. The formal opening on Sunday drew out immense crowds and in the evening the church was altogether too small to accommodate the people and many had to be turned away Principal Grant preached two able and eloquent sermons. It is reported that a new pipe organ will be added shortly.

The Cricketers Vanquished.

The 11th inst. proved a black Friday for the Cricketers. Ever since they defeated the Printers' nine they have been hugging themselves with the delusion that they could trounce any baseball aggregation in town. On Friday last they ran up against a selected team from the town and were beaten to the tune of 21 to 16. It was a great and exciting game of baseball and the large crowd present grew wildly enthusiastic at times. It was some time after three o'clock p.m. before all the preliminaries incidental to a struggle of this character were adjusted, and umpire E. Vanalstine set the ball in motion by sending the town team to the bat. Livesley, the bright and particular star of the town team, was the first to face "Shorty" Trimble, the deceptive curve manufacturer of the Cricketers. He connected with his delivery at once and rapped the sphere out for a two bagger. He stole third and came home on Armstrong's sacrifice hit, averting a whitewash. Pitcher Armstrong didn't strike his feet until the third innings and the Cricketers knocked out six runs in the first innings and three in the second innings while he was locating himself. After this, however, he settled down to biz and pitched a really excellent game, shutting out the opposing side three times in five innings. Albert Root put up a good game behind the bat and his throwing to bases was excellent. After the second innings the town team cottoned right on to Trimble and batted him all over the field. Towards the last of the game that usually steady young twirler grew a trifle wild and sent a number of men to bases on dead balls. Livesley at first base, was a tower of strength and put up an errorless game. He gathered in a number of hard flies and embraced everything else that came within his reach. The Rev. W. W. Peck held down third base for the town and demonstrated that he knows considerable about the game called base ball. At the bat he rapped out a beautiful three bagger and was always able to connect with the ball. Mr. Peck is at home at the sprint and when he let out after H. Daly, who was legging it back to second after an unsuccessful attempt to reach third, and caught him before that player could cover half the distance he electrified the crowd. Harrison at left field played his usual good game and gathered in a number of difficult flys. S. Lockridge at first base, and W. Rockwell behind the bat, both put up a good game. Fred Sheppard covered himself with glory by catching a hot fly off J. G. Daly and sending it to third putting out H. Daly and retiring the side. Leamy played a very consistent game. The crowd were unanimous and very outspoken in the matter of awarding him the palm as the champion "fan." He furnished a very fine exhibition of how the game should not be played. Livesley holds the record as the champion heavy batter. In the fourth innings he batted the ball out of the lot, making a home run and taking in two men. Gates, Peck, W. Rockwell and Skeates had three baggers to their credit. The town team went in for their eighth innings and had two runs and one out, and two men on bases when the game was called on account of darkness. The following is the score:

Resolution of Condolence.

The following is a copy of a resolution passed by the members of Argyll Lodge, No. 212, I. O. O. F:

GEO. CLIFF, SR., ESQ.:

Dear Sir and Bro.,—In accordance with a resolution, moved by Brother Walters, seconded by Brother Carson and unanimously adopted at the regular meeting of Argyll Lodge No. 212 I. O. O. F. on the evening of Thursday the 10th inst., in which, your great age, your long term of membership, your being a charter member of the Lodge, and the great esteem in which you are held, especially by the older members of the lodge, were fully expressed, we beg most affectionately to express the hearty sympathy of the Lodge with you in your recent bereavement by the death of your beloved partner in life.

As you are well versed in the teachings of our noble order, we know that you have not lived without considering the end of life and the separation from loved ones here, but we also know that when from long association as husband and wife, one has learned to depend upon the "Friendship, Love and Truth" of the other almost as much as upon himself and when such a one is removed by death, we also know that the rending of the heartstrings must be painful to a high degree, the feelings of desolation must be very great and our hearts go out in sympathy to you, our brother.

We rejoice in the high esteem in which you and your late wife have been held by the community at large, and the assurance you have of being, perhaps at no distant day, reunited where death cannot enter and where there is ample joy in the presence of the Saviour, whom you have both so faithfully served here for so long.

We earnestly commend you to the love of our Heavenly Father, before whom we must all soon appear for judgment.

Signed on behalf the lodge,

T. F. OLIVER,
J. D. BISSONETTE, M.D.,
J. S. ROBINSON.

A Wishing Party.

The street urchins sat on an abandoned stake wagon which ornamented a vacant lot on South Third street. The conversation had been mainly directed to a discussion of baseball. There was a lull for a few moments, then the smallest of the quartet spoke up:

"Say, fellers, what would youse radder be dan anything else?"

This sort of an inquiry was rather out of the ordinary like of stake wagon talk, but the other three seemed in a good humor to answer, and Jimmie, the Mope, spoke first:

"I'd radder be a dorg," said he, "'cause I wouldn't have to wear no clothes, and I could spen' me whole time chasin' cats."

"Dat's a fine kine of a wish, I mus' say," Mickey Moran, the toughest boy in the neighborhood, was the one who spoke now. "Wat's de matter wid being a woman, so's you could stay home all day an' bake cakes, an' pies, an' eat 'em yourself?"

This conception of Mickey's pleased the crowd highly. Then the urchin who proposed the wishing business began.

"I wish't I was a cop. Dey don't do nuthin' but ride on street cars free an' swipe peanuts." But just then the policeman on the beat appeared, and a second later the stake wagon was unoccupied.—St. Louis Republic.

At the Wrong Nuptials.

"If any man can show just cause why these two persons may not be lawfully joined together, let him now speak or else hereafter forever hold his peace."

Slowly and impressively the officiating clergyman spoke these words. The solemn pause that followed their utterance was broken by a deep, strong voice from the rear of the church.

"May I ask you, sir, to repeat the names of those two persons who stand before you as candidates for matrimony?"

"George Washington Spoonamore and Jophenia Shaw," answered the clergyman, astonished at the interruption.

"Go ahead with the marrying," rejoined the owner of the deep voice, clapping on his hat and starting for the door. "It's all right. I had just got here, and hadn't heard the names. The wedding I'm trying to stop must be in the church a block and a half below here."

ALL ABOUT SPONGES.

INTERESTING INFORMATION CONCERNING THEM.

Sponges That Are Hives of Industry With Streets and Alleys—How the Sponge Reproduces Its Species—Methods of the Scientific Culturist.

It is asserted by a Greek gentleman named Charalampos Chorphios that if proper measures were taken, the sponge fishery of Florida could be restored to the highest productiveness within a few years. Unquestionably a considerable appropriation of money would be required, but it would be trifling compared with the cash value of the augmented crops.

The sponge reproduces its species by means of spores, corresponding to eggs, which are set free in the water. After being "hatched," the young ones swim about for a while, eventually attaching themselves to a rock or other object.

The mature sponge also produces little buds, which detach themselves from the parent and float away to begin life on their own account. The scientific culturist, however, makes use of neither of these natural processes.

The method he adopts is extremely simple, though requiring care and skill. Traveling over the fishing grounds in a boat. He pulls the sponge to the surface with a hook on the end of a long pole. The freshly tackled sponge is not taken out of the water, but is held beneath the surface, while the operator cuts it into pieces.

The knife used is as sharp as a razor so that as little injury as possible shall be done to the tissues of the sponge. The animal is cut up in such a manner that each piece shall retain a part of the original external surface. Finally each fragment is fastened to a bit of stone by a wire and is then dropped to the bottom.

In shoal water an easier and preferable method is to thrust a small splinter of wood through each fragment and stick it into the bottom. In this way a number of sponges are made out of a single sponge. Some of the fragmentary ones die, but the great majority of them survive. For three or four months they seem to be sickly, but at the end of that time they recover and begin to grow with surprising rapidity. The planting must always be done where the sponges will not be rolled about by the waves.

There are thousands of species of sponges, but only half a dozen have any commercial value. There used to be much dispute as to whether these creatures were animal or vegetable, but science has decided them to belong to the former kingdom, being very low down and degraded relatives of the corals.

The fact is that a sponge, like the coral, is a colony of little animals which occupy a sort of apartment house together. The animals are called "polyps," and each of them being both male and female, every individual in the community is in a position to rear a family on its own hook. The sponge in nature is a fleshy and somewhat jelly-like body; only the skeleton figures in commerce. The commercial sponges have horny skeletons, but there are ever so many species which have glass-like or limey frames.

The next time you use a sponge, examine it, and you will find that the surface is covered with holes. Toward the top these holes are much larger. The whole mass is pervaded by a system of channels. When the animal is alive water is kept constantly flowing through these channels by means of minute, hair-like appendages which the little polyps agitate. The water is CENTREVILLE.

The Fall Fairs being all past, potato digging is the order of the day. The fair held here on Saturday was one of unusual dimensions. The amount of exhibits and crowd of people in attendance greatly exceeded anything of the kind ever held here. The rain in the evening made it rather disagreeable on the grounds and put the racing track in very poor shape for speeding purposes. Yarker brass band was in attendance on the grounds and also took part at the concert held in the hall in the evening and together the Messrs, Moore and Shorey, of Newburgh, and Mr. J. Graham, of Enterprise, and the Misses Brady, of Sydenham, ably assisted in the completion of the programme.

COLD STORAGE.

Farm Should Have a Small Department of Its Own.

The cold storage business is taking [illegible] proportions. Its development is [illegible] principal cities of the country. [illegible] nothing less than phenomenal [illegible] years. And now cold storage warehouses are being erected at many country shipping points. In some cases they are put up by the farmers themselves, who organize co-operative stock companies and conduct the business on the same general principle that is applied so successfully in co-operative creameries. Most of these cold storage plants in both city and country use chemical refrigeration or other artificial means of creating and maintaining a low temperature. We understand that recent progress in this line makes it possible to build and equip a cold storage plant at comparatively reasonable cost. Of course, where the ice crop is assured, no expensive refrigerating machinery is required, and in such localities cold storage can be provided in connection with a neighborhood ice house. The fact that cold storage is coming into such extensive use in the cities is the best possible evidence that it generally pays to thus hold perishable products until they can be marketed to the best advantage. Now, if this is such a thing for marketmen, cold storage is equally useful to farmers, and with corn for which they can utilize its advantages over the co-operative method. Indeed the farmer can have a fruit cellar that is queer without built on a side hill, which always does not require ice, and a small cold storage room should be a feature of every farm or home ice house.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Girdling Girdled Trees.

In answer to the inquiry of D. L. G. of [illegible] relative to saving his apple trees, if the season is not [illegible] I think nine-tenths of the [illegible] may be saved if there is not too much of the bark gnawed from the tree. The time consumed in the operation might more than equal the value of the tree. Would advise D. L. G. to proceed as follows:

Partially or wholly encircle the tree at the extreme portions of the injured bark, then peel off all the bark in the space intervening between the upper and lower encircled bark. Measure the length of the space to be covered. Now go to your orchard of older trees that you wish to trim; cut off a limb an inch or more in diameter; measure a portion of this limb so that it will equal the length of space to be covered on the tree. Encircle the limb so as to obtain the length of bark; slit it and peel off. If not sufficient to cover space, take another section, etc. Cover with string and cover with grafting wax so as to exclude air and water. If D. L. G had proceeded as above twenty days ago I think he could have saved a large percentage of his trees.—D. E. D., in Ohio Farmer.

Yield of Cheese From Milk.

With ordinary milk the yield is about 2.5 pounds of cured cheese for each pound of butter fat in the milk. The per cent. of butter fat in different milks very nearly determines their relative values for cheese making. Prof. Van Slyke of New York found by a series of careful experiments that with milk ranging from 3.4 per cent. to 4.4 per cent., the amount to each pound of butter fat was 2.72 pounds of green cheese, or 2.5 pounds cured for five weeks. It was found the 5 per cent. milk made but 2.4 pounds of cured cheese for each pound of butter fat, but the better quality of the cheese from the richer milk was thought to compensate for the slight difference in quantity. It will be seen that 100 pounds of 4 per cent. milk made 10 pounds of cheese and 100 pounds of 5 per cent. milk made 12 pounds of cheese.

Milk cans. Every one knows that our milk cans are made, not thrown together, and we have 800 more than we want. They have to be sold. Come and get one at Boyle & Son's.

POULTRY MANURE.

Its Great Value and How Best to Keep and Use It.

Few people know what and how much they lose when they neglect their hen manure, says Farm and Home. Really, nothing is more wasteful and unthrifty than to allow poultry of any kind to roost at night in trees, on fences, or anywhere except over a compost heap, or above a tight board floor. Birds are so constituted that water, of which most of them drink a great deal, passes off through the skin and breath to a very large extent and not through the kidneys, as is the case with the mammalia. The manure of fowls, therefore, contains their urine as a solid excrement. It may be recognized by its white color, and constitutes the most valuable portion of their droppings. The flooring or boards under the henroost should be smooth and close, with cleats around the space upon which the manure will fall. Dry earth, sand even, mixed with land plaster, or sprinkled over after spreading with a solution of sulphate of iron (copperas) should be evenly spread or scattered upon this floor daily; and where there are many hens the whole should be cleaned off and renewed twice a week. The proportion of earth to be added should be two-thirds or three-quarters of the entire bulk. It should be placed in a heap under cover on a cement or brick or clay floor, where it may be shoveled over and mixed with sweepings of the house, feathers, broken eggs, dead chickens or rats or other small animals and such refuse generally, including old hens' nests. It must be kept moist; and in case there is any odor, either of decompositon or ammonia, it must be suppressed by sprinkling with copperas water, scattering plaster or gypsum over the heap, or by the addition of more earth. The best earth for all such purposes is loamy soil. It should be prepared in dry, hot days by sifting upon a floor of boards in the sun, raking it over until thoroughly dry, and barreling for use. Hen manure and wastes of the poultry house, preserved in this way, will in the course of a few months become nearly homegeneous and fine fertilizers for field and garden use. A fresh heap should be started after the first has reached a convenient size; and it is always well to have a stick 1 or 1 1-2 inches in diameter, run into the heap, and going nearly to the bottom, in order to judge of the heat caused by the fermentation, which is constantly going on. This will be known by the heat of the stick when drawn out. When the manure gets too hot, it must be shoveled over and repacked solidly.

Fine-Tooth Comb Cultivation.

The contest is still on between the old-fashioned and the new-fashioned cultivation of coarse crops. The old fashion says: "You can't make me believe that your new-fangled weeders and smoothing harrows can tell the difference between a corn plant and a weed." The new fashion retorts: "Your dull hoe and soddy corn rows drove the boys off the farm." It is a sort of guerilla warfare upon the outposts of the two systems. The sober seeker after truth would like to see the real issus poined, for he is tender both of his back and of his young plants. The impartial student of the question will find that the new-fangled machine does not distinguish between species of plants, but it does have a brutal respect for strength, and will tear out the hair-like tendril of a just-sprouted weed but leave unharmed the deeper rooted corn or potato plant. But it will leave the weed if once well established; therefore "early and often" is a by-law of the process. On the other hand, if the smoothing harrow or weeder can scrape along a piece of sod, a flat stone, or an old corn stub, it appears to enjoy the destruction of a young corn plant equally with crow or chipmunk. A clean surface in preparing for the crop is therefore another necessity of successful use of the new corn culture. With these things in mind the new method can be made a great improvement on the old by any farmer. —American Agriculturist.

through these channels by means of minute, hair-like appendages which the little polyps agitate. The water is thus drawn in through the small holes and ejected from the big holes at the top.

It brings with it animalcules and other food that is required for the support of the colony. The channels above described are the streets and alleyways of the polyp town. If you look at a living sponge in shallow water you will see that there is a continual bubbling above it, caused by the income and outgo of the water through the canals.

Be Agreeable.

The otherwise good man who lacks politeness or assumes a gruff, repellant manner really sacrifices a part of his gifts, for very few people will discover his good qualities under his repulsive manners. Those who do may have patience to bear with him, knowing that his heart is right, but others will judge him by his manners, and finding him disagreeable, will avoid intimacy with him. It is not enough, therefore, to be just or kind hearted, one should also be agreeable in manner, and it requires very little effort to be so. The foundation of agreeable manners is thoughtful consideration of others, or true politeness. This does not imply any necessary sacrifice of frankness and honesty. It does not mean that one shall not contradict or dispute, but it does mean that when a contradiction is made necessary it shall be expressed courteously and in this kind of politeness, for in so far offensively. Everyone should cultivate as it helps to make one agreeable, it extends his opportunities for usefulness and helps to make one agreeable, it extends his opportunities for usefulness and helps to give full play to his other good qualities.—Baltimore Sun.

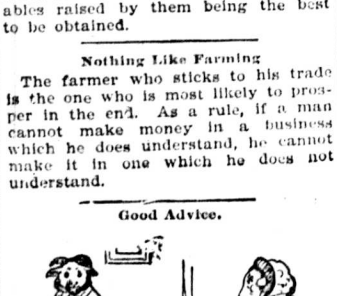
A Colony of Vegetarians.

At Oranienburg, near Berlin, a colony of vegetarians was started some years ago, and is growing slowly but steadily. Founded in 1893 by seven enthusiasts on the subject, there are at present 47 homesteads where 37 families and 10 single men have built houses and raise their cabbage. Outside of the vegetables necessary for their own food, they have planted 35,000 fruit trees, and 15,000 berry bushes, and have fenced in the entire property with a hedge of hazel nuts. From a financial standpoint they are doing very well because they realize excellent prices for the products of their truck farms, the quality of the vegetables raised by them being the best to be obtained.

Nothing Like Farming

The farmer who sticks to his trade is the one who is most likely to prosper in the end. As a rule, if a man cannot make money in a business which he does understand, he cannot make it in one which he does not understand.

Good Advice.



Mr. Ram, sen—"Now, never get excited, my son; when you get in a tight place, use your head."—Harper's Monthly Magazine.

When to Prune Grape Vines.

Grape vines left unpruned during the summer exhaust themselves by producing an enormous amount of useless wood. In the fall most of the new roots are cut out, and those that remain are allowed very few buds. Into these all the strength of the vine is thrown. Some strong-growing varieties, like the Rogers Hybrid, have been known to make 18 to 20 feet of long, slim cane. If pinched back when the vine has grown shoots three or four feet long, the new canes will be thicker and much better prepared to bear a crop the following year.—Rural World.

On the arrival of the special his Excellency's suite were met by the directors of the Agricultural Society, whose guest he was. The members of the County and Town Councils' procession was formed at the station, a guard of 100 mounted yeomanry forming a body guard. The procession was headed by the 16th Battalion Band. As it moved out into Main street the view was something to be remembered. The street was literally packed. The procession passed down Main street and through the principal residential streets. A very pleasing feature was Piper McIntosh, of Belleville, stationed on the arch in Tecumseth Ward, who played appropriate Scotch airs, and a bevy of young girls who showered bouquets of bright colored flowers on his Excellency's carriage. At the fair grounds, Lord Aberdeen was presented with an address by the Agricultural Society, the County Council and the Town Council, to which his Excellency replied in a very neat speech, expressing himself as highly delighted with his reception, making particular mention of the tasteful decorations and the novel feature of being attended by a body guard of mounted yeomanry of the county.

This memorable visit was brought to a close by the departure of his Excellency's train at 4 p.m. amidst great cheering as the train moved from the station.

Caraway.

Caraway when once started will hold its own by self sowing, even in land where it has to struggle with encroaching weeds. If the soil is kept loose about the bearing plants, so the seed can fall on fresh soil, there will be no trouble in keeping a stock of it from year to year.

Fertilizers in Floriculture.

Pansies were treated with muriate of potash and made 806 blooms, and with sulphate of potash made 1,363 blooms. On carnations, sulphate of potash with sulphate of ammonia gave the best results, being closely followed by the same form of potash combined with bone black, while the poorest results were from sulphate and nitrate of potash, sulphate of potash and dried blood and muriate of potash in excess. Observations on carnations for 31 weeks gave the best results for nitrate of potash, sulphate of potash second and dissolved bone black the poorest results. In five experiments made in this line, three have been in favor of bone black, one of sulphate or ammonia and one of nitrate of potash. Sulphate of soda has stood second in each one. The nitrate of soda and muriate of potash in every case where the crop has a tendency to mildew have given poor results, owing, probably, to their power of holding moisture near the surface of the soil. In the growth of the rose, lettuce and carnation a moist atmosphere, or a very moist soil in contact with the plants, especially at night, must be avoided if success is expected, and therefore such fertilizers as nitrate of soda and muriate of potash would aggravate any such condition.—Farm and Home.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY OCT. 2, 1896.

AFTER all the ado about "French domination" it still remains an undeniable fact that Quebec is the only Province in Canada having a Tory Government.

THREE partizan French translators have been translated out of a job. They can now devote their time and talents without let or hindrance to advocating the Tory cause.

As a sample of the unfairness of the Templar, the alleged organ of the Temperance cause, it is only necessary to allude to its statement that the Liberals cannot claim the credit for the abolition of the sale of liquor in the House of Commons.

THE Interior remarks that the hearty words of praise many a minister receives when he quits a field which his parishoners have made too uncomfortable for him, reminds one of the epitaph a French husband inscribed on his wife's tombstone: "Tear cannot recall her, therefore we weep."

THE proportion of those who can read and write in the several provinces of the Dominion is as follows: Ontario 91.31 per cent; Manitoba 88.76 per cent; P. E. Island 83.33 per cent; Nova Scotia 82.77 per cent: New Brunswick 80.76 per cent; British Columbia 74.94 per cent; Quebec 68.04 per cent.

THE RIGHT KIND.

Waldo F. Brown Gives His Experience With Chicken Coops and Houses.

After over fifty years' experience in raising chickens, I have this year made a lot of coops that give better satisfaction than any I have ever seen, and I would advise every farmer to make some this winter. I believe that it is not exaggerating to say that millions of chickens are lost each year on account of the kind of coops they are kept in. They are eaten up by rats, drowned by rains, or poisoned by accumulated filth. On most farms the chicken coops are temporary affairs, made from old barrels or boxes, or simply a few stakes driven down and the hen crowded into a space entirely too small for her. I bought one patent coop for $2, and found that I had paid just 1.99 more than it was worth.

Lately I have studied the subject and made a few coops and tested them this year, and while I do not think they cannot be improved, I have found them better than any I have ever seen. In studying the subject, I concluded that the essentials of a good coop were economy, portability, thorough protection from both storms and dampness, also from all enemies, and durability, for the coops should be made so that they will last ten years or more. The coop that I have chosen is made three feet square, with a floor raised six inches from the ground at the front and eight inches at the rear, the object of this slope being to prevent water from running to the back part in case of a driving storm, and the object in raising the floor is to give immunity from dampness, and yet leave no place for rats or other vermin to hide under the floor, and to make the floor last much longer than it would if resting on the ground.

To make the coop light, we use posts at the corners two inches square, cover it with half-inch lumber, and make the roof of sheet-iron. For ventilation, we cut a small window, say 6 by 12 inches, at each side, and cover it with wire netting on the inside; but have a small slide-door on the outside, to close in cold or stormy weather. At the front we make a door as wide as the coop, excepting a three-inch strip at each side, and this door is a light frame, covered with wire netting so close that the smallest chicken cannot get through it, and hung with hinges so that it can be swung open when we wish to let the hen or brood out. When the coop needs cleaning, we open the door, and with a hoe and broom can soon remove all accumulations.

When the coop is finished, we spike a strip to each side, which projects both front and rear about 18 inches, to be used as handles to move it, and two men can walk right along with one of them. These strips used as handles should be 1 by 3 inches, of light but strong wood, and the corners should be rounded where they project.

A run should be made in front of the coop, the sides being made of movable panels of fence made of fine-

A LEVEL FOR TILE DRAINING.

A Low-Priced and Effective Instrument for This Specific Purpose.

The level shown in the cut will cost perhaps 35 cents for material and a little more for making, unless you can make it yourself, says a writer in Ohio Farmer. To adjust and graduate it, drive two stakes into the ground solid to receive the ends of the level, and as near level as you can tell by your eye. Put on the level and make a pencil mark at the point of the plumb bob. Reverse the level and mark. If the two marks do not come at the same place, one end is too high.

You can easily tell which end is too high, then drive it down until the bob points to the same place, with the end either way. Then whenever the bob points to this place it is level. Mark this place with a fine saw, or in some way you cannot mistake. Raise the lower end of your level and put under it a piece one-quarter of an inch thick. Mark a bob point. Remove the piece and put it under the other end and mark the same. You can do this with one-half, three-quarters or one inch pieces. Now the level is graduated and marked ready for use.

To level a short distance, I place the level in the middle and sight both ways along the under side of the level. Any difference in height will show the fall.

To lay tile by this level, I begin at the lower end, place the first tile where I want it, then place a tile where the other end of the level reaches. If the grade is one-quarter inch to the rod, I raise or lower the tile until the plumb bob points to the first mark back of the center or level mark. Then I place a tile half way between these two, just touching the level. Then lay between these tiles by a straight edge. When you get to the middle tile, move it forward or back to receive full tile. Fill our your rod and repeat. If your fall is one-half inch to the rod, use second mark.

I have laid tiles when I did not have one-quarter inch fall to the rod. Then I had the bob point half way between the center and one-quarter inch mark, making a fall of one-eighth inch per rod.

Be sure your plumb bob works freely and do not allow it to be swayed by the wind. I think I could instruct anyone how to level more correctly by the way mentioned above and with less expense than going six miles for a surveyor.

The "Kelsey" Corrugated Warm Air Generator.

Any ordinary Hot Air Furnace will produce heat if you will only supply enough fuel. The "Kelsey" has several special and valuable features but most important is that it will give more heat with less fuel and is the most durable heater made.

The "Kelsey" fire pot being constructed of several upright, tubular, corrugated, cast iron sections (see cut) around which the fire passes and up through which the cold air passes while being heated, and this entire section being wrapped with a heavy steel casing which becomes heated by the fire striking it when passing down outside of upright sections towards smoke pipe, it in turn warms the air that passes up between this steel casing and the galvanized iron casing, this explains why the "Kelsey" has three times more radiating surface and warm air capacity than an ordinary Furnace. The "Kelsey" heats every room evenly, wheresoever located, with a nice, mild, healthful warm air that will not injure your furniture.

The "Kelsey" will heat rooms 60 feet distant.

The "Kelsey" does not heat your cellar.

The "Kelsey" is absolutely gas and dust proof.

mesh wire—one inch, as young chickens and ducks will go through two-inch mesh until they are three or four weeks old. I buy this fence in the roll for 40 cents a rod, and the two-inch mesh for 20 cents. The panels of fence should be made strong, and so put together that they will remain firm. For young ducks no floor will be needed, but the only way to keep young chickens from having the gapes is to keep them from the ground until they are six weeks old. One hen will take care of 40 ducks or 25 chickens in one of these coops; and after the ducks are three weeks old, and the weather is settled, they are as well or better off without a hen.

I can raise chickens better in an upstairs room than in any other place. I have a hog-house 8 by 12 feet, with a six-foot story below, and for several years I have used the upper floor for young chickens. I put four hens loose with 25 chickens each in it, and each hen keeps her own corner to brood them in, and I have never had a chicken killed by the hens. We keep a shallow box of fine gravel, and one of ashes and dust for their bath, and the chicks keep healthy and outgrow any that I have ever kept on the ground. This last May I hatched an incubator lot, and a few hens at the same time, and I put 50 in this loft, and the rest in coops, and those in the loft all lived and grew so that it was hard to convince a stranger that they were of the same age as the ones in coops. I took them down at four weeks old, which was too soon, for one or two of the hens went to laying, and left one hen with 90, and then came up a driving, cold rain, and they piled up and smothered 30. This is one thing to be guarded against with chickens, but they will never do it if kept dry and warm, and here is one point in which ducks are superior to chickens, as they never pile up so as to smother.

With such coops as I illustrate, and 25 chickens only in a coop, there would be little danger of loss, for rats will not go through the fine wire, as they are too cautious. I greatly prefer these coops for ducks to any I have ever tried but up-stairs rooms for chickens are the best, and by making them rat-proof the barn lofts can be utilized for early chickens, as they are usually empty until June.—Waldo F. Brown, in Country Gentleman.

To Dry Salt Butter.

To dry-salt butter, place butter on worker, let it drain ten to fifteen minutes, then work gently till all the butter comes together. Place it on the scales and weigh; then weigh salt; for slight salting, one-fourth ounce; medium, one-half ounce; heavy salting, three-quarters ounce to the pound of butter. Roll butter out on worker and carefully sprinkle salt over the surface, a little at a time; roll up and repeat till all the salt is used. Never touch the butter with the hands.

The Warm Poultry Mash.

In all warm foods, whether soft or otherwise, be careful not to feed too hot. The temperature of the food is best not hotter than one can bear with the hand without discomfort. While it is well to mix with boiling water, it is best to cover and let the food steam and cool somewhat before feeding to the fowls.

To be removed. All the effete or waste matter of the system is removed by the perfect action of Laxa-Liver Pills. Thus they prevent as well as cure Sick Headache, Constipation, Billiousness, Dyspepsia, Sour Stomach, Sallow Complexion, Jaundice, Dizziness, etc.

HOW TO KEEP APPLES.

Chief Requisite for Preservation Is a Uniform Low Temperature.

On the subject of keeping apples Mr. O. W. Hawden of Worcester, Mass., in a recent address, said: "If apples are expected to keep well they must be picked from the trees and handled carefully. Barrels and boxes are found the most convenient packages for apples, but should be washed and thoroughly cleansed and dried before using; care should be taken that no nails protrude through the staves. The fruit should be carefully placed in the barrels and gently shaken and pressed into them as compactly as possible to prevent any motion of the fruit after the barrels are headed; each sort should be marked and placed where the temperature is low and uniform if possible. If apples are to be stored for winter or late keeping the sooner placed in a cool and uniform place the better. A fruit house or cellar made with a view for the purpose is best, but most growers usually have to resort to their cellars. The chief requisites for the preservation of fruit from October to May or June following are a uniform low temperature, which in autumn may be obtained by giving abundant ventilation on cool nights, to be closed when the atmosphere is warm. Fruits should be maintained or kept in as nearly as possible its condition when gathered. The gradual ripening process, or the fermentation of the juices premonitory to decay, should be checked and kept in a dormant condition. When maintained nearly at freezing point the mellowing or ripening process in the fruit nearly ceases. Fungi and mildew, the primary causes of decay, do not germinate under these circumstances. The best late keeping results are promoted thereby. The prices at which apples are sold differ very materially between October and June and are often as one to five; thus the growing price in the cellar is of fully as much importance as the growing fruit in the orchard."—Ice and Refrigeration.

Working the Roads.

A good many of our readers will be warned out by the supervisor to work the roads. In some cases it will be going through the form mainly, or playing work the road; in others there will be a good deal of work done. Much of this good work done is spoiled by reason of the incompetence of the supervisors. We have seen roads rendered impassable almost all summer by the lack of a little know-how on the part of the man who was bossing the job. Where dirt is plied into the middle of the road with plow and scraper, it is folly to fail to use the harrow. If the harrow is not used, and used thoroughly, the result will be that the road will be full of holes for months to come. When a thresher wishes a first-class track for his horses he selects ground that has been plowed and thoroughly harrowed. He knows that this will tramp down smooth and hard. Freshly plowed ground or a pile of fresh dirt contains large lumps and many comparatively open spaces, and when travel comes on it without being sufficiently pulverized, it makes the very worst kind of a road. Therefore, before leaving the road, harrow thoroughly and completely and thus prepare a good highway.—Wallace's Farmer.

FAILURE

A lonely man, all bent and ag'd,
With wrinkled brow and sunken eye,
As if some wrecking storm had rag'd
And dashed his soul on breakers high.

Sat brooding o'er the fruitless years
Of life—all selfish, empty, vain—
Which, like a tale that's told, appears
To yield nought else but grief and pain.

The story, which his life unfolds,
Is told by many a one besides;
And in his failure one beholds
The goal to which the devil guides

One false, mistaken, foolish deed—
A sin you call it, not a crime—
But still, a sin, which like a seed
Has grown and spread with growing time.

'Twas this, this only, nothing more
Which marked the lonely man's career;
It's darkening shade, at every door
Grim mocked him with its cynic sneer

This road to wealth or road to fame
Is blocked behind and blocked before
By Nemesis, that heartless dame
Who loves to tear the wailing sore.

Thus thought the lonely man one night
As home he went from fruitless toil
And dreamt of happy homes and bright,
Which made him from his own recoil.

What boots it that the fault's his own?—
That he but suffers for his sin—
While turn and harden into stone
The hearts, once soft, of kith and kin?

He only knows that now they're hard,
When, most of all, he longs and yearns
For help to live the life that's marred
While vain regret within him burns.

Back through the weary years he looks,
Scans he all that might have been,
Reads chances lost, as he would books
Once strong to stir, now powerless seen.

And, as he looks and reads and scans,
An impulse fresh stirs once again.
The nerveless arm and, with it, fans
The dying embers in his brain.

I will not yield, he seems to say,
To unkind fortune, hostile fate,
Spread they their clouds although they may
Or, heartless, say, "'Tis now too late."

Once more I'll strive to make a name,
To bring me homage, bring me friends;
For, be it wealth or be it fame,
To these alone the world e'er bends.

And in the world's high dancing smile
I'll lose myself, forget my own,
And, on my dead affections pile
Great mounds of wordly praise alone.

Thus spoke and dashed the lonely man
Forth, fiercely and with fixed intent
To seize the world's good things began
While relish keen ambition lent.

And first within the world's great mart
He strove for fortune's favoring smile;
But though he played right well his part
Fair fortune passed him by the while.

Then tried he physic, then the law,
But each looked on with cool contempt,
And while they scorned the world foresaw
But failures of the dreams he dreamt.

Next from the press and pulpit came
Strange, thund'ring, eager, loud appeals
Which, neither weak, nor poor nor lame,
Yet o'er them quick oblivion steals.

And, then the poet's art he tried,
Poured wildly forth his passion's words
Loud through the world and long he cried
Like echoing wood and song of birds.

For this it was they came and went
And no man stopped to ask them why,
Till age the creaking tree had bent
And shrill had grown the bird's glad cry.

He paused and rested as he said,
"For me I see no chance of fame
The poet's fire no glow can shed
To lead me on with 'luring flame."

So, bitter, hopeless, sat he down
And blamed the God of heaven and earth
As if, because of Heaven's frown
His soul had no poetic birth.

Then flashed on him the truth revealed,
That, as of old, Prometheus found
No stolen fire would ever yield
A spark of fire to mortal bound.

So, now, the soul must be inspired
By breath of Heaven freely sent
For, ne'er will eagle's claw grow tired,
While sordid motive fetters lent.

At length he slept, and in his sleep
An angel came, and with her hand
Up pointed to a hillside steep
Whereon he saw three crosses stand.

Then asked he what those crosses meant,
And to him thus the angel said:
"A word from them to you is sent
"Which, as you gaze, is quickly read—

"The cross upon the right is yours
It tells of one who, hopeless, died
Although for him, a Saviour pours
His cleansing blood from cross beside.

"The cross you see to left arise
Bore one to whom a dazzling light
Had pointed clear to Paradise
And changed his faith to happy sight."

Still further, then, the angel spake
And bade him rise, once more begin
With help of Him who for his sake
On yonder cross wiped out his sin.

No longer then, by force he saw
Is wealth or friends or glory won;
But by the never changing law
Revealed to man by God's own Son.

For self alone man must not live
Since one small life is too confined
To hold the soul which God did give,
A common gift to all mankind.

A man must help his brother man
To live with him a nobler life
Whose aims are broader than the span
Of mortal power or selfish strife.

In earnest this he strove to do;
Regardless of what might have been;
His powers though feeble, on he drove,
While work itself gave relish keen.

And only how he sorrow had
When back though wasted years he goes
And sees his life, once bright and glad
All darkened o'er when sin arose.

And kept him in the devil's power,
But now in Christ his waning life
Finds comfort strength in every hour
Of busy struggling worldly strife.
—Erlac in Toronto Church Evangelist.

THEY DIDN'T GET IT.

There Seemed to Be a Little Difficulty and the Matter Was Postponed

An elderly couple came into the office of a dealer in marble the other day and wanted to look at "something kind o' nice in gravestones," runs a story in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"What kind of a stone did you want? Something for a child, or adult or——"

"No, it's for ourselves."

"For yourselves?"

"Yes, we're kind o' gettin' 'long in years an' we've kind o' talked the matter over an' made up our minds to pick out our own gravestone. It won't hurry us off a day sooner to do it, an' we'll have the satisfaction of getting one to suit us."

"About how much do you want to pay for one?"

"Well, we ret the figger at from $20 to $30. Can we get something kind o' neat an' tasty for that?"

"Yes; now here's a brown granite one for——"

"I don't like them nasty brown or gray gravestones," interrupted the old lady. "I'd never rest easy under one; I want a white one."

"Sho, now, Mandy," said her husband; "I think them brown ones are real rich lookin'."

"I don't, Aaron Puddy, 'n' I won't have one. How much is this white one?"

"La, Mandy, you don't want a gravestone with a little lamb carved on it."

"I'm goin' to have either a lamb or a dove on it, Aaron Puddy."

"Did you want one stone for both of you?" asked the dealer.

"Yes. We thought it'd ave expense. How much is this one with the cross on it?"

"I won't have one with a cross on it. Folks 'd think we was Catholics or Episcopals, 'stid o' free-will Baptists. How much is this one?"

"Great Scott, Mandy! You s'pose I'd have a manyment like that set up over me?"

"It's a plaguey site prettier than that thing with the cross on."

"No, it ain't."

"It is, too."

"It isn't."

"It is."

"Why don't you get one for each of you, so that each could be pleased?"

"Well, there's no use payin' for two stones when one will do. How'd you like this one, Mandy?"

"There's no lamb nor dove on it."

"I could put one on it for you," said the proprietor.

"I don't like the shape of it. How much would this one be with the lamb on it?"

"I tell you flat-footed, Mandy Puddy, that no lamb nor dove goes on my gravestones. Purty lookin' lambs an' doves we air!"

"That's polite to me, now ain't it, Aaron Puddy? If you ain't got any more manners than to talk like that right before strangers you ain't fit to have no tombstone over your grave. I'm goin' home, an' you kin git a tombstone to suit yourself, an' I'll come in some day by myself and get one, if it does cost double. Good-day, mister."

THE GARDNER'S SONG.

Oh! a gardener's life is as pleasant a life
As a workingman's can be;
'Tis a glad pursuit to plant the root,
And nurse the flower and tree.
His life is set to ceaseless song,
Sweeter than poet can sing,
Warbled in notes from the feathered throats
Of the birds from summer to spring.
And doth he not make the wildest brake
Gay as a conqueror's fleet?
For his strong, white hand is the magic wand
That brings fresh flowers to our feet.

With a sneer or a frown a man may look down
Upon many ignoble trades;
But purple and pride even dare not deride
The work of the king of spades.
The oldest craft known he claims as his own,
The only work heaven thought well
Should be done by a man ere a trouble began,
Or the "grand old gardener" fell.
Then the men of the spade should be proud of their trade,
Invading no crowded mart,
Whose daily toil gives wealth to the soil,
And joy to the home and heart.
—Gardener's Magazine.

Keeping Ice.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says: "I have a frame building, 19 by 16 inside, 7 feet from floor to beams, and propose dividing it off for an ice house as below." Then he asks: "Could you tell me how much ice I could pack in it, and how much would be required to keep the room (12 by 6, by 7 feet high) cool for six months."

The outside walls should be hollow and the space between them, six inches to a foot, can be filled with sawdust or cut straw. Both ends of the ice house will want ventilators placed in your child

You note the difference in children. Some have nearly every ailment, even with the best of care. Others far more exposed pass through unharmed. Weak children will have continuous colds in winter, poor digestion in summer. They are without power to resist disease, they have no reserve strength. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, is cod-liver oil partly digested and adapted to the weaker digestions of children.

gives the classifications of soils as light (sandy), heavy (clayey) and humus.

Aside from the withdrawal of plant food by growing crops, the chief loss of fertility in the soil is due to leaching or the removal of elements of plant food by solution in water percolating through the soil. The lighter or more candy the soil the greater the liability to leach. On the other hand, clayey soils may be so heavy as to be unproductive because of lack of proper drainage.

In well-drained land the decay of vegetable matter underground produces the black, insoluble humus universally recognized as giving fertility to the soil.

In wet, poorly drained land the result of decomposition is a brownish, partly soluble product that because of its acid qualities produces what is termed a sour soil that is unproductive.

WORKING PLAN OF ICE HOUSE.

them, to allow the hot air to pass out of the building. If a coat of dryish sawdust is kept over the surface of the ice at all times, it should keep fairly well. In round numbers there would be room for 1000 cubic feet of ice, and it weighs 57,097 lb. per cubic foot. The entire space should be filled, to make certain that the supply would last through the season.

Thick vs, Thin Wheat Seeding.

A series of experiments has been conducted for eleven consecutive years by the Indiana Agricultural Experiment Station relative to the quantity of wheat seed to sow. Seeding took place September 20. Oats stubble was broken and thoroughly prepared and velvet chaff wheat, a medium-sized seed, used. The average yield, as well as the yield and weight per measured bushel in 1895, is shown in the following table:

Yields Per Acre From Thick and Thin Seeding.

Seed sown p a 11 years.	Bushels av	per acre 1895.	Lbs per str'k bu.'95
Two pecks ..	23	20	59
Three " ..	25	18	59
Four " ..	27	19	58
Five " ..	29	20	59
Six " ..	29	19	58
Seven " ..	30	19	58
Eight " ..	30	19	58
Nine " ..	27	16	58
Ten " ..	25	16	57

In 1891 the highest yield was produced from three pecks, and in 1895 from two pecks. In both the years named the wheat tillered well and did not winter kill. The time of sowing, preparation and fertility of soil and size of the wheat kernels are all factors to be taken into account in deciding upon the quantity of seed per acre. The results obtained at the Indiana station indicate the desirability of sowing at least six pecks per acre as a rule.

The Farmer's Wife.

Too much has been written about the "overworked farmer's wife." Such articles may help to open the eyes of some thoughtless husbands, but they also serve to frighten some city wives, whose husbands would like to live on a farm if only the wife were willing. I remember that, when my husband first told me that he would like to live on a farm, I thought it ground for a divorce, and told him so. All I knew of farm life was what I had read, and all I could seem to remember of that was that the farmer's wife worked from morning until night, day in and day out; that she never could go anywhere; or, if by any possible chance she could, she never had anything fit to wear. Now I know that there are farmers' wives who enjoy themselves, and who have far more of the comforts of life than most city wives. If there are others who have to work too hard, let us not tell or write of it, but, like the skeleton, shut it in the closet that it may not frighten others, for the man who would thoughtlessly overwork his wife in the country would let her starve in the city.—M.T. in Rural New Yorker.

W. C. McCOMBER & SON, Bouchette, Que., report in a letter that Pyny-Pectoral cured Mrs. C. Garceau of chronic cold in chest and bronchial tubes, and also cured W. G. McComber of a long-standing cold.

MR. J. H. HUTTY, Chemist, 528 Yonge St., Toronto, writes: "As a general cough and lung syrup Pyny-Pectoral is almost invaluable preparation. It has given the utmost satisfaction to all who have tried it, many having spoken to me of the benefit derived from its use in their families. It is suitable for old or young, being pleasant to the taste. Its sale with me has been wonderful, and I can always recommend it as a safe and reliable cough medicine."

The Herdwick Sheep.

Twenty-three well-defined and distinct breeds of sheep are recorded as bred and kept on the British islands. Of these the various classes of Downs and the three leading long wooled breeds have, for many years, been also bred in America, and more recently the Dorsets have been imported and have proved a valuable addition to the sheep stock of the United States. Among the breeds unknown this side of the Atlantic is the Herdwick, the illustration above being of typical animals of that breed. These are peculiarly upland sheep, flourishing only on the hills of Cumberland. For activity and impatience of restraint they are rivaled only by the Rocky Mountain "Bighorns." They become strongly attached to their native mountains, and it is [illegible] when removed to new and strange locations that their independent character shows itself. They are hardy, easily kept and admirably well adapted for what is called "rustling"—that is, picking up their own living at all seasons of the year. The legs and face of Herdwick lambs are black, but at the end of the second year they whiten somewhat, to a silvery gray. The ewes are horned, the rams have horns. They have bodies are compact, with good quarters. This ers, and the mutton is of very fine quality. The fleece is light and of little value. There are many mountainous and broken regions of the United States and Canada for which this hardy cliff-dwelling race of sheep would seem to be well adapted.—Farm and Home.

Skim Milk Calves.

The Ontario Agricultural College reports the following experiment in feeding calves:

"Beginning May 6 an experiment was conducted to find the relative value of skim milk and whole milk for calves. Two grade calves as nearly alike in age and weight as we could get were selected. No. 1 fed on skim milk only, was dropped May 3 and weighed only 61 pounds on May 6. At the end of six weeks it weighed 141 pounds, a gain of 80 pounds, or nearly two pounds per day. During this time the calf drank 714 pounds of skim milk. Calf No. 2 fed on whole milk (dropped April 19), weighed 75 pounds at the beginning, and 201 pounds at the end of six weeks, a gain of 126 pounds, or three pounds per day.

"The calves were both sold to a local butcher, who pronounced the calf fed with whole milk worth 1 cent a pound more than the other. The calf fed on skim milk sold for $8.50, and the one fed on whole milk for $7.50. Allowing $1.50 as the value of No. 1 calf and $2 as the value of No. 2 at the beginning of the experiment, we have $2 as the value of 714 pounds of skim milk, or twenty-eight cents per 100 pounds, and $5.50 as the value of 714 pounds of whole milk, or seventy-seven cents per 100 pounds. To produce one pound of gain required 8.9 pounds of skim milk. The whole milk gave one pond of gain for 5.6 pounds fed."

Value of Thought.

It will sometimes pay the farmer to work less and think more. Many a man has worked hard early and late for a year and found at the end of that period that he could have made more money with less work if he had sat down behind the barn and figured for about a week.—San Francisco Call.

LIVE STOCK

THE ARAB HORSE

Views of Randolph Huntington, the American Authority on Breeding.

Mr. Randolph Huntington of Oyster Bay, L.I., N.Y., the leading American authority on all matters relating to the Arab horse, says the Country Gentleman, was born in Springfield, Mass., Dec. 8, 1828, of old Connecticut stock, and a direct descendant of one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He was educated at a military school at Hamden, Conn., and pursued for many years a mercantile career, but seized every opportunity meanwhile to prosecute studies in animal breeding, this science having been a passion with him almost from earliest childhood. At five or six years of age he was keeping rabbits and guinea-pigs, and a little later canaries, game fowls, pigeons, squirrels, dogs and other animals—always seeking to get the best he could find and then to improve their progeny by careful mating. Finally he settled down upon the horse as furnishing ample scope for all the skill and knowledge he could bring to bear, and for years now, as readers know, he has been diligently engaged in studying, thinking, observing and writing about that animal, and in breeding what he regards as the best specimens of the genus in the world. His views may be briefly summarized as below:

Haphazard breeding, producing mongrels, can never accomplish anything; there must be a yet undiscovered path, at least an unfrequented one, whereby the breeder could be as confident in the prospective produce of his horses as in that of his Guernsey or Jersey cows. Other animals, bred in families, attained their highest excellence; why was the horse an exception? Presumably he was not. But how were the twisted and entangled threads of equine life to be unwound? How from the commingled breeding of decades of years was a pure strain of blood to be picked out? Immediate change to uniformity was impossible. It would take years to produce a single pure type from so heterogeneous a mess. But, nothing daunted, and guided by taste already successfully made in poultry-breeding, he began the work. His selection and championship of Clay blood is too well known to dwell upon. Suffice it to say that the researches he made, together with personal experience and observation, led him to believe that the Arabian horse proper was the sine qua non of perfection in horse-breeding. Henry Clay, a notable horse in himself, was directly traceable to Arabian lineage. Securing the best obtainable of his sons and daughters, selections were made and these were carefully interbred. On the arrival of Gen. Grant's Arabian horses Leopard and Linden Tree, gifts from the Sultan of Turkey, Mr. Huntington was permitted to send a few of his mares to Washington, where they were bred to Leopard. But the acme of his desire was not reached until 1888, when he succeeded in obtaining the pure Arab [illegible] Breeding her to Leopard, [illegible]itve foundation of pure [illegible] was also able to secure [illegible]son of Naomi by Kismet [illegible]aughter of Naomi by Good ventilation should be provided by a door at one end and a window at the other, and for protection from cold in zero weather the window should be arranged for double sash, and a storm door be built outside of the door. This building should be located near the barn, or if there is room, it may be partitioned off in a basement or under a hay bay, but in cold regions where mercury remains for weeks below zero I would prefer the separate building outside, and would build a flue and set up a stove so that a fire could be built once a day in severe weather.

In feeding beets to cattle or hogs we do not cut them at all, as long experience has shown that it is useless. A cow sometimes get choked on a triangular piece of beet that has been cut, but no cow ever choked on a piece that she bit out of a beet herself, and they will eat them without danger or waste if fed whole. I value beets for feeding to the brood sows, and think they are worth more for this purpose than for any other. If you want early pigs, move your sows into the empty bins from which the beets have been fed out, putting them there ten days before farrowing, and you can save all the pigs in the worst weather, and by the time the pigs are ten days old they can be moved to the hog house.—Waldo F. HUNGARIAN SWINE.

A Breed in Which "the Whole Hog Goes Into the Sausage Tub."

Hungary in its climate and soil greatly resembles our Middle States.

TYPICAL MAN GALICZA HOG.

The greater part of its 14,000,000 of inhabitants are engaged in agriculture, growing especially wheat and corn, and raising all kinds of farm animals, among which the horse and the hog occupy first place. The stock of the present Hungarian swine was originally brought from the Mongolian desert, when Attila with his hordes left that overpopulated land. Undoubtedly this stock originated from the wild hog, which, during the long warring peregrinations of its owners, was subjected to the most remarkable changes of form, without losing its principal good qualities, hardiness in keeping and fine fattening properties. Among the four principal breeds raised in Hungary none excel the Man galieza. The extensive oak and beech forests on the mountain slopes of Hungary furnish unequaled swine pasture, and have largely aided in giving the Man galieza swine a leading position in the live stock markets of north and middle Europe. Many thousands of their hogs are each week disposed of in Berlin and Hamburg, because, as a Berlin butcher told the writer, "the whole hog goes in the sausage tub." The head of the Man galieza is short and broad, nose cylindrical, depressed at the back; face and cheeks are fleshy, thinly covered with hair; jowls broad and fleshy; ears large, somewhat rounded and drooping; neck mostly short, fleshy and full arched; the withers are wide and do not rise above the back; back straight, long and broad; loins full and deep; brisket deep and wide; ribs well sprung; belly wide and straight, nearly touching the ground in well fattened animals; hams large and full; lower part of legs fine-boned but strong; skin soft, thin and pliable, of a yellowish or black color. During winter the skin is thickly covered with curled hair; at the neck, withers and along the back the hair is somewhat coarse, but not long. During the summer the hair growth is thin, some animals being nearly bald. A full-grown Man galieza hog stands at least three feet high and measures from tip of the snout to the root of the tail about four feet. Ordinarily fed animals at

A FEMALE CREW.

"Now, which one?" asked Polly, and she stood on tiptoe that she might determine the point.

She was a plump Polly.

She was a short Polly, and the mantelpiece was a high one, so that there was no other thing to do than to stand on tiptoe while she gazed at two faces and wondered: "Which one?"

They were not female faces, but Polly, though young, was old enough to take a very positive interest in masculince faces. She had already decided which one she would like to marry, and would she have been surprised if some day, out of that surface of paper on the maitelpiece had broken a voice "Polly, my dear, as I love you, will you marry me?"

But he had maintained a grave silence because only a picture, for which reason nobody could claim credit for unusual discretion of speech for a man. Yes, dumb, dumb, and that gave Polly's warm affection a chill. Then he was her "first cousin Joe," and a kind of brother, was he not? That gave her marrying fever a still colder chill. This young man was very handsome. His eyes were as expressive as Polly's and that is saying a good deal. Her eyes were black, soft and loving. Anyone that had eyes as handsome as Polly Ricker's owned an excellent piece of property. His features were very regular. The lines of his mouth showed firmness, yet tenderness, and Polly, first looking round to see if Aunt Nabby were "peekin'," had kissed the picture the very day of our story. Aunt Nabby was not given, though, to "peekin'." That very moment she was frying doughnuts because Polly liked them. The other picture on the mantelpiece was that of an honest, reliable soul; but Polly had no affection for him. She was a visitor under the roof, and in the two weeks that her visit had stretched across, she had learned very much about the history of beings whose only presence was that of pictures. Had not Aunt Nabby said that this plain, sensible face belonged to a sailor, a young captain?

"Oh, the other is a seaman only; but I had rather marry a handsome sailor than a homely, stiff captain," was Polly's opinion.

She sighed.

She was thinking that the handsome sailor was only Cousin Joe. She hesitated a moment, kissed the photograph again, and then went downstairs to look out of a window fronting the sea and to pity sailors.

Everybody in the neighborhood had something to do with the sea, which was only a bit of a way off, and kept pounding night and day on the rocks, making all the fuss it could to attract as much attention as possible. To keep this unruly sea in any kind of subjection everyone must do something. Uncle Ronald Ricker was the keeper of the yellow life-saving station on the rim of the gray sands.

Uncle Ronald was a big, burly, good-natured kind of a fellow. Aunt Nabby was a slim, slender woman, whose thoughts were quick moving, darting out like swallows' wings, and her eye sparkled like a run of brook water the day the spring has lifted the lid of ice covering it.

Said Uncle Ronald to Aunt Nabby, in the hearing of Polly at the window:

"I'd like to have you, Nabby, clean up at the station, if you will; sweep round and so on. Nothin' doin' there in summer, but I want to keep things sort of slicked up, and I'll 'low you the pay for it. I've got to be off to my tater-patch t'other side of the back [illegible] off there on the water and needed some signaling from the shore!"

If she had followed the promptings of her heart and the signal vocabulary permitted, she would have at once signaled: "I love thee, Joseph." But he was just Cousin Joe, and repressing any demonstration of special interest, she lifted the scuttle in the roof, threw it back, climbed upon the platform and looked off.

Hear heart started up and began to beat like a thresher's flail for there was a schooner flying a signal. She knew what it meant. Was it Cousin Joe off there? Whoever it was, a signal of "distress" was fluttering above the vessel. Should Polly run and get Uncle Ronald? When in summer during the season of closed doors and vacant roofs at the station, any disaster might happen on the water, the proper procedure was to run for the keeper and notify him. At the head of as many of the old crew as he could gather from the cornfields and fish houses, the keeper hurried to the station, operating as might be advisable. Uncle Ronald, though, was off on a "tater-patch," a mile away. In the meantime the whole United States navy, ducking their heads one after the other, could sink off this very station.

"Wasn't a female crew running this station to-day?" soliloquized Polly. "I'll answer that signal myself."

The schooner was so near the shore that if her sails had been set the appropriate signal would have been the J.D. of the international code of signals: "You are standing in to danger," but this vessel had dropped her canvas, as if meaning to halt anyway, and then she had a suspicious look, as if sinking.

"I'll let them know they are recognized, and that they may expect help," thought Polly, working swiftly.

Turning away from the staff, at whose head now fluttered this signal like a tongue of cheering speech, Polly ran down the short stairway into the crew's night quarters, then down the stairs, dropping to the kitchen, and cried, in jerks:

"Oh—oh!—zounds!—auntie — quick! Danger!"

"What?"

"Quick!"

She was now darting through outer door.

"Git your uncle, Polly!"

CONCLUSIVE PROOF.

From a Well Known Citizen.

"My daughter Polly, has for more than a year been troubled with severe symptoms of kidney disease. She had constant and acute pains in her back. The pain in her head was fearful and almost unendurable. It frequently prevented her from attending school, and she found study at home practically impossible. She had no appetite, and did not sleep well. The pain was very severe around her heart and she was much troubled with fluttering and palpitation. She was completely worn out in body and was tired and drowsy all the time. Her mother and myself became seriously alarmed as she was constantly getting worse.

"Last July my daughter Sarah, a teacher in the Public School at Kingsville, Ont., came home to spend her vacation, and finding her sister in such a distressing and dangerous condition, said, I am taking Doan's Kidney Pills and they are doing me much good, I have a box with me and will divide with Polly, which she did. By the time Polly had finished the half box her improvement in health was so marked, that I procured more from Mr. Erskine's drug store.

Her full restoration to health and spirits was rapid and continuous. She has now none of her former dangerous, painful and distressing kidney troubles. She eats and sleeps well, and for more than a month has enjoyed the most vigorous health. She has not lost a day at school since she commenced taking the pills, and has so much faith in them since they restored her to full health that she wants me to keep six boxes in the house all the time, in case they should be needed and not available. Her cure has been so wonderful she thinks they will cure any complaint. If the pills had cost $10.00 a box, I would not have begrudged the money. The restoration of my daughter to full health and strong girlhood, from her former serious sickness, etc., has made her mother, myself and daughter a happy family.

"I make this sworn statement with the full approbation of my wife and daughter, voluntarily and without any urging or inducement whatever, to show the gratitude my daughter, wife and myself feel for the wonderful cure wrought by the Doan Kidney Pills. We have not the least doubt that her trying the pills just at the time she did saved us a large doctor's bill, as she was all but sick abed at the time. Ordinarily fed animals at the age of one year weigh from 150 to 160 pounds; but when well fattened the weight of a full-grown hog increases to from 500 to 600 pounds. They are not very prolific breeders, producing seldom more than from seven to eight pigs in a litter, but they are very careful in treating their young, and therefore the loss of pigs is but inconsiderable. The hardiness of this breed enables it to thrive even under unfavorable conditions, and to winter in the open air without suffering. If taken to the pen, after pasturing in fields and forests is over, and fed with corn and other grain, it produces a first-rate lard, which is not surpassed in flavor and keeping quality by that made from any other breed.—American Agriculturist.

His back and quarters are simply perfect, and his legs, supported on the best of feet, are like bars of steel. This stallion is also a superb mover, and at the walk there was probably no horse in the show that could surpass him. His victory, therefore, was particularly well received.

Sunlight for Pigs.

A writer in Wallace's Farmer makes the following very sensible remark about the necessity of providing plenty of sunlight for young pigs:

Many a fine litter of pigs is injured seriously the first week by a lack of sunlight. A young pig is much like a flower in this respect; it must have sunlight or be dwarfed in size, impaired in health and spoiled for future usefulness. Where farmers have a hog house in which a number of brood sows are having their litters, we advise puting in cheap sash on the south side, which can be done very easily and at present prices at a very small cost. A brood sow should never be allowed to produce a litter in a dark place.

...the pay for it. I've got to be off to my tater-patch t'other side of the back pastur'."

"I will, Ronald."

Ronald Ricker left the room.

"Polly, soon as I've finished these ere doughnuts—then—come on!" cried Aunt Nabby. "We will run that life-savin' station this forenoon. They shall have a female crew to-day. You get the brooms ready. It is a worn-out thing down at the station. We'll be lively and start soon."

A small but sprightly broom-brigade soon charged upon the station and captured it without difficulty. Windows were thrown up, the brooms set to whisking and the dust routed.

The living room below, the men's headquarters by day, speedily was swept. The boat room, with its apparatus of surfboat and breeches-buoy, life car and Lyle gun, rockets and signals, received prompt attention, and this floor also was thoroughly swept. Aunt Nabby remained to do some "cleaning out," behind the door where one of the other but less particular crew had left a heap of dirt. Polly, singing away, went upstairs, hopping like a robin from step to step, landing on the threshold of the masculine crew's quarters by night.

"The beds look all right," said Polly, eyeing six iron beds, neatly covered with bedding and set in two prim rows along the northern and southern walls of the room. "Yes, they look all right, but I know those men didn't sweep under the beds. N-o, before I sweep, I'll take a look-off from the look-out on the roof."

This was a platform on the roof, railed about and supporting a flagstaff. Here on clear days a watch was kept by the surfmen. If need be, a signal could be run up to the top of the staff and any needy craft on the water promptly instructed.

"Guess women's eyes can see as quick as men's," murmured Polly, "and we will have it so to-day."

On her way up a short flight of steps to the look-out she halted in a little recess and examined the box of signals kept there. Since her arrival she had been very much interested in the signal department, and, instructed by Uncle Ronald, felt that she could now handle those signals as readily as the keeper himself.

"Don't I wish that Cousin Joe, whom I never saw, only in his picture, were "Too—too—far off! Come!"

And Nabby sprang after ...

"Let's take—uncle's—boat, ... by!"

"We go off?"

"Yes—yes! You can row ...

"Good for ye!" cried Aunt N... "I am with ye!"

They rushed uncle's boat down to firm, shelving sands. They pulled through the low-running surf and soon were alongside the schooner in distress.

"Quick—quick!" said a sailor, bringing a box to the vessel's rail. "We ran on the rock in the night, lost our boat, though, we got off the rock, started a leak, and have been settlin' ever since. There, I'll go back with ye. Then I'll pull off and get another load. Cap'n is in the cabin gettin' things up. You are good to come off—women, too. Ready? Hum—now? All together. Pull!"

The boat was rowed ashore, the box, precious with papers and money carried up the sands, and then the sailor said:

"Lemme go back alone. It will make more room for the next load, with cap'n or anyone that comes."

"I won't marry that captain, running on a rock," thought Polly. "He must be stupid and homely. Give me a handsome sailor."

She thought of Cousin Joe and the homely captain perched in state on the mantelpiece at the house.

As if looking behind and discovering her thoughts, the sailor remarked:

"It wan't no fault of our cap'n that we were on that rock, or narybody's. Things will happen, you know."

"I wouldn't marry him anyway," silently resolved Polly.

As the boat was rushing through the surf, Aunt Nabby said:

"Now, Polly, we are the crew to-day you know, and must do just as the crew does to the shipwrecked. I'll start a fire in the kitchen stove in the station. I saw some coffee and sugar down there in the pantry, and I'll stir some milk and cake and biskit. We'll fix 'em. You watch by the stuff, as it comes. Rest of the crew is agoin' to the station."

Load after load was safely brought fro mthe schooner, which all this time was ettling. With the last boat load came the captain. Polly started when she saw him step on the sands. Why, hadn't she seen it while he was in the boat nearing the land? If Cousin Joe's picture had left the mantelpiece and, turning up, had stepped out of the boat, she could not have been more surprised. This was Cousin Joe himself. She sprang forward.

"Why, Cousin Joe, is it you?" she cried, this short surfman flying up to him, reaching as high as she could and throwing her arms about him.

"I—I—I—" stammered the young man blushing, though not displeased. "I—I—thank you with my whole heart for helping us so nobly, but I am not your Cousin Joe," sorry to say."

Not Polly's Cousin Joe?

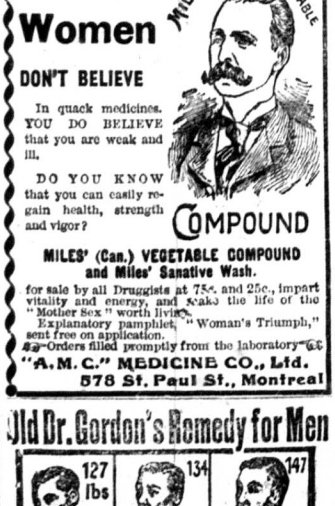
"Why, why," she murmured, in confusion, starting back.

Another voice, though, was speaking—somebody from the station—and laughing heartily. "Dick Warner, I do declare—ha, ha! Glad to see ye hum! Polly, Polly, dear, come here! This is Dick Warner."

"I thought it was Cousin Joe—that picture on the mantelpiece," said Polly blushing and hanging low her head.

"No, no," screamed Aunt Nabby, "you made a mistake. Cousin Joe is t'other picture—ha, ha! He'll be hum soon!"

Yes, the real Cousin Joe came home soon, and just in time to hear of the engagement between a certain young female surfman and Capt. Richard Warner.—N. Y. Ledger.



A Great Hunter.

The late Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha was noted as one of the keenest sportsmen of the century, as well as an enthusiastic patron of everything connected with natural history. In the fifty-six years of his hunting life he killed 3,500 red deer and about 2000 chamois. But his ancestor, the Elector John George I. of Saxony, shot 47,229 red deer in forty-five years. The late Duke's keepers were the most efficient of their class in Germany, the reason being that they were ex-poachers, to whom the Duke had offered the alternative of jail or an honest life.

Tea For Embalming.

Lovers of tea will hardly appreciate the grewsome reminder that tea leaves are used in China for preserving corpses. Well-to-do celestials often embalm the mortal remains of a specially loved in a chest of tea which preserves the body for many years. A great many persons are giving up tea as well as coffee and are using a substitute called Cereal. It is made from selected grains and is considered very healthy. Grocers are finding a large sale for it. Grocers sell it.

A Pertinent Question.

THE NAPANEE EXPRESS tells of citizens of that town losing their grapes just as they were ready to pick, by reason of "some spirits, or boys moved by spirits," (evil ones) having visited the orchards the night previous to the time of picking them. This complaint is not confined to Napanee, but applies equally as well here and other places. To such an extent is this thieving carried on that it is almost useless to attempt to raise any of the choicest fruits, and we hear of persons who have choice vines and other trees cutting them down, because of this thieving propensity of the boys, on account of which they are unable to garner any of the fruit. It is enough to make one ask the question. 'Is the world growing better?"—Sterling News Argus.

Canada a Winner.

Canada has many things that excite the curiosity and admiration of the outside world. Amongst these it is doubtful if any Canadian institution commands more general interest than the Family Herald and Weekly Star, of Montreal. You may travel anywhere throughout Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Manitoba, British Columbia and Newfonndland and there you are sure to see the Family Herald and Weekly Star, a paper that is looked forward to each week with intense longing by its subscribers. Outside of Canada, too the Family Herald and Weekly Star has a very large circulation, one of the highest tributes that could be paid to its excellence, for it goes right in and competes with fo eign papers and beats them on their own ground. It's simply wonderful.

A special meeting was held in the Girls' room on Wednesday evening for the purpose of closing up the business connected with the late dinner and entertainment. It was resolved that the annual Christmas sale should be held on Wednesday and Thursday, December 9th and 10th.

Obituary.

We regret to chronicle the death of Mrs. W. G. Deceased was the only daughter of Mr. Geo. W. Shibley, and wife of W. G. Cowan, G. T. R. telegraph operator at the station. She was a devoted member of the E. M. church, and although her life was short her work was well done. The departed was a neice of Mrs. H. Finkle, Centre street. The funeral took place on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, and was largely attended, showing the high esteem in which she was held.

John Poole, of Kingston, aged 75, had a vivid dream, which ended disastrously. Imagining a bull was chasing him, he leaped from the bed in terror, struck a bureau, broke his collar bone, and cut his face terribly. It is not stated definitely, but it is surmised that he had a late supper of lobster salad.

The Tilsonburgh Observer gives an account of an infant son of Mr. and Mrs. John Ball, of Houghton Township, who was born about fourteen months ago with three eyes, the extra one being situated in the spine at the waist line. It is provided with an eyelid and eyebrow exactly like the two in its head. The eye was bandaged to prevent injury, and it was sensitive as ordinary eyes. Recently the child fell and burst the eye, which then came out.

About two miles east of Picton, on the high banks of the Bay of Quinte, stands a quaint, substantial old square building, the oldest Methodist church in actual use in Ontario, if not in Canada. Nearly four thousand Methodist churches now stand in use in this country, but none of them have a history dating as far back as the old Conger chapel, and yet it was built within the lifetime and memory of some now residing in that locality.

Matrimonial.

On Wednesday evening at St. John's church, Bath, our esteemed townsman, Thos. J. Naylor and Miss Sarah Coates, daughter of John Coates, of Napance, were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Rural Dean Baker. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Jane Coates, and Arthur J. Callaghan, of Kingston, supported the groom. Mr. and Mrs. Naylor left on a trip to several American cities. They will return in about a fortnight and will reside in town. We welcome "Tem" among the noble army of benedicts and join with his many friends in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Naylor a long, prosperous and happy life.—Deseronto Tribune

Death of John Walsh

At the ripe old age of 92 years John Walsh, one of the oldest residents of Napance passed quietly away at the residence of his son-in-law, Thomas Trimble. Deceased settled in Napanee when the town was but a forest. He was an industrious, kindly hearted man and much esteemed and respected. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon from the R. C. Church to the R. C. cemetery and was largely attended. J. F. Walsh a son of the deceased, is now on his way from Capetown enroute for Napanee and is expected to arrive here about the middle of this month. Mr. Walsh was a man of the strictest integrity, and an ardent Reformer. He was a friend of Sir Richard Cartwright and of Jno. Solomon Cartwright, who at one time represented this district.

Letter to the Editor.

Mr. Editor there is quite a work going on in the cemetery (commonly called the Huffman graveyard, west of Piety Hill) under the supervision of Mr. J. R. Fraser a man well qualified for the work. Roads, avenues and walks have been made, graves and plots have been repaired, low brush cut out, trees limbed up, and the vault nicely repaired, and is now one of the best in this part of the country. Mr. Fraser with a gang of men have done a work for which the many who have friends interred in that cemetery will be thankful, and well they may, for it is just what should have been done years ago. You have only to go and look at the place and see what has been done, to be convinced that much more should be done. Mr Fraser having been appointed superintendent of the cemetery is prepared to receive anything from anyone who may feel disposed to aid in repairing and beautifying the place where our loved ones sleep. Now dear friends let us make this spot of earth worthy of those who are sleeping there. All persons wanting lots can have them by applying to Mr. J. R. Fraser, and he will also, if you place the means in his hands see that your plots and graves are fixed up and beautified.

Matrimonial.

A very quiet wedding was solemnized in Hamilton, Ont., on Wednesday evening, September 30th, when Miss Agnes Deshane, daughter of Joseph Deshane, of Marlbank, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Chas. Donbraugh, a highly respected young gentleman of Hamilton. The ceremony was performed at the residence of the groom's brother, 134 John street, N. Hamilton, only a few intimate friends being present. Miss Donbraugh, sister of the groom, acted as bridesmaid, and Mr. Jackson, of Hamilton, did the duties of best man. The wedding presents were numerous and costly, showing the high esteem in which the young couple were held by all their friends. The EXPRESS joins with their many friends in wishing the happy couple a long and prosperous wedded life.

A Great Game.

That fickle lady Dame Fortune did not smile on the efforts of the Printers' base ball team on Monday afternoon last, but despite the bad behaviour of the aforesaid Dame the typos managed to pull the "fat out of the fire" fairly well, as at the end of the eighth innings, when the game was called on account of darkness, the score stood even, 27 to 27. The Printers outbatted, outfielded and outplayed the Cricketers in every respect, but a run of hard luck in the second innings, when the Cricketers piled up 15 runs, made it a very uphill battle for the remainder of the match. The game was called at 2 30 p. m. The Printers went to bat first and drove out five runs off pitcher Lockridge's delivery before the side was retired. Armstrong, for the Printers, held the Cricketers down to four runs in the first and everything was going lovely. In the second innings the Printers secured four runs. The Cricketers then went to bat and the run getting was fearful to behold. There was only four hits made in this innings, all one baggers too, but nevertheless 15 runs were netted. Overthrows and hard luck were accountable for this phenomenal run of runs, although one uncharitable fellow said the Printers allowed the Cricketers to secure this lead to make the match more even. At the end of the second innings the score stood 19 to 9 in favor of the Cricketers. After the second innings the latter were thankful if they succeeded in getting one man in before the side was retired, and their backers, who, after the second innings were confident that they had a sure thing, began to feel somewhat uneasy. McCulloch, of Newburgh, was placed behind the bat for the Cricketers and Lockridge retired from the box in favor of Trimble. The Printers had now struck their feet and had on a batting streak. After several innings Trimble, who was being batted heavily, made way for Harrison, and he in turn was "put" for the heavy hitting typos, and after pitching about half of the eighth innings was replaced by McCulloch. It was not ascertained whether they had any more available pitchers as the game was called too soon to find out. In the eighth the Cricketers succeeded in getting four runs with no men out. McDonald met with an injury to his finger in the third innings while batting, and was replaced by Coates. Livesley, on first base, put up star game for the Printers. Root, who took up his station behind the bat in the third innings, replacing Rooney, played a fine game, and McCulloch also put up a good sample of ball. Ed. Grange and "Joe" McAlister, who figured in a game of ball for the first time in several years, played their positions well. Lockridge played a nice game and the old reliable Sandy Armstrong was much in evidence, pitching the whole game without getting knocked out of the box. Rev. W. W. Peck held down third base to the Queen's taste. Nice double plays were made by Livesley and Ashley. "Phil" Vanalstine made a good umpire and there was not much cavilling over his decisions. A large and very enthusiastic crowd, among whom was a sprinkling of the fair sex, followed the game with interest. The following is the score:

Two Men Drowned.

Belleville Sept. 30.—A severe storm broke over this city, commencing with a heavy fall of rain on Wednesday. Mr. Thomas Irwin, a Grand Trunk employee, and his son William left in their boat at daybreak to go to their fishing grounds down the bay. Near Northport their boat was overturned and both men were drowned. The storm caused considerable havoc in the city. THE BARTERING INSTINCT.

A Case in Which It Was Strongly Developed and Persistent.

There was a wistful expression on his face as he strolled to the box-office of the theatre. He stroked his beard with an assumption of nonchalance and said to the young man who was selling tickets:

"Be ye goin' ter hev anythin' goin' on here ter-night?"

"Yes, sir," was the answer. "We have a performance here every night."

"Crowded houses?"

"Oh, I guess we can find a place for you if you want to go in."

"I wouldn't want anythin' very expensive. 'Most any place 'ud do fur me."

"We can sell you a seat for twenty-five cents."

"That's rock-bottom prices, is it?"

"We can't give any discount on that."

"Wal I dunno. Would ye sorter do me a pus'nal favor?"

It was a dull day and the man in the box-office was a little lonely and to keep the conversation going, he answered:

"Yes, if you don't ask me to pass you into the show for nothing."

"I wouldn't make no sech request es that, I'm willin' ter pay fer my amusement, or go wethout. But would you take five two-cent stamps in part payment?"

"Yes. We can use them."

"An' I've got a dime with a hole in it. Would ye jes ez soon let that go in fur eight cents? That's a discount of two cents on account of the hole."

The ticket seller was thoroughly amused by this time and he answered:

"Yes. Let's have it."

"That'll make eighteen cents. I reckon you'll want seven cents more."

"I'm afraid I will."

"Wal, here's the eighten cents. I'll come around ter-night an' set down anywhere ye put me an' when ye think I've seen eighteen cents' wuth, ye kin send one o' yer hired men around an' notify me. I'll git right up an' go out an' there won't be any disturbance whatsomever."

"We can't do anything like that. You'll have to buy a ticket for the whole show or not go in at all."

"Wal, there's only one thing I kin offer ye. Ye can take yer choice. I'll give ye this here jack knife that I paid a quarter fur less'n a year ago, an' which only hez one blade out o' the three broke. Er I'll give ye this ten-cent piece of chewin' terbacker which I was goin' ter take home ez a present ter the hired man."

"I—I don't see how we can do anything like that."

"It 'ud be a great accommodation."

"All right," said the amiable ticket seller. "Hand over the jack knife." And he threw him out a ticket.

"I know ye ain't runnin' no junk shop," the applicant said as he passed over the cutlery, "an' I'm much obliged ter ye fur makin' this exception. I hated ter go 'way wethout seein' a theatre-show, but ef I was ter hev paid real money out an' out, I don't think Mehitabel would ever fergive me fur it. But the postage stamps 'ud likely hev got lost before I got a chance ter use 'em, an' I couldn't pass the dime, an' I've got another jack knife. So ez long ez I jes' traded in fur it, I kin enjoy the catin' weth a clear conscience an' go home an' tell Mehitabel all about it."

Castoria is truly a marvelous thing for children. Doctors prescribe it, medical journals recommend it and more than a million mothers are using it in place of Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, so-called soothing syrups and other narcotic and stupefying remedies. Castoria is the quickest thing to regulate the stomach and bowels and give healthy sleep the world has ever seen. It is pleasant to the taste and absolutely harmless. It relieves constipation, quiets pain, cures diarrhœa and wind colic, allays feverishness, destroys worms, and prevents convulsions, soothes the child and gives it refreshing and natural sleep. Castoria is the children's panacea—the mother's friend. Castoria is put up in one size bottles only. It is not sold in bulk. Don't allow any one to sell you anything else on the plea or promise that it is "just as good" and "will answer every purpose" See that you get C-A-S-T-O-R-I-A.

Interesting Description of How It Was Made and Its Customs.

Many people doubtless know that upon the accession of a new monarch to the throne of England a new seal is struck and the old one is cut into four pieces and deposited in the Tower of London. In former times the fragments of these great seals were distributed among certain poor people of religious houses. When Her Majesty Queen Victoria ascended the throne of England, the late Benjamin Wyon, R.A., the chief engraver of Her Majesty's mint, designed the beautiful work of the present great Seal of England. The details of the design are: obverse, an equestrian figure of the Queen, attended by a page, Her Majesty wearing over a habit a flowing and sumptuous robe, and a collar of the Order of the Garter. In her right hand she bears the sceptre, and on her head is placed a regal tiara. The attendant page, with his bonnet in his hand, looks up to the Queen, who is gracefully restraining the impatient charger, which is richly decorated with plumes and trappings. The legend "Victoria Dei Gratia Britanniarium Regina, Fidei Defensor," is engraved in Gothic letters, the spaces between the words being filled with heraldic roses. The reverse side of the seal shows the Queen, royally robed and crowned, holding in her right hand the sceptre, and in her left the orb, seated upon a throne beneath a niched Gothic canopy; on each side is a figure of Justice and Religion; and in the exergue the royal arms and crown, the whole encircled by a wreath or border of oak and roses.

The seal itself is a silver mould in two parts, technically called a pair of dies. When an impression is to be taken or cast, the parts are closed to receive the melted wax, which is poured through an opening at the top of the seal. As each impression is attached to a document by a ribbon or slip of parchment, its ends are put into the seal before the wax is poured in, so that when the hard impression is taken from the dies the ribbon or parchment is neatly affixed to it. The impression of the seal is six inches in diameter and three-fourths of an inch

PURCHASING ROME.

(From Harper's Weekly.)

It is suggested that the Roman Catholics of Christendom shall subscribe a billion dollars to buy Rome and a near-by seaport for the Pope. The belief is expressed that the Italian government might sell the property without serious detriment to its political integrity, and that the money could be used to great advantage in relieving Italy of part of the burden of her public debt. It is not proposed to turn over the principal to the venders, but to place it in trust, and to pay its annual proceeds into the Italian treasury as long as the Pope remains undisturbed in the papal territory. The plan is a very pretty one, and there are those who think the money might be raised, and that King Humbert's government would appreciate the advantages of such a bargain. But would Rome be the best purchase the Pope could make with the money? Chicago would take him vastly cheaper and give him port privileges on Lake Michigan, but she could not engage to make him monarch of an American township at any price. But there is Constantinople, an excellent city, where popes have lived before, full of ready-made churches built by Christians and nearly ripe now for reconsecration. Constantinople seems liable to come into the market any day. If the Pope could buy it of the Sultan that would be a deal worth subscribing to, and worth turning a page of history to record.

It Is A Pleasure

For Mr. Davidson to Speak.

An Esteemed Citizen of the Ancient Capital.

What He Thinks of Paine's Celery Compound.

The following letter from Mr. Wm. Davidson, of No. 2 Oliver street, Quebec, P.Q., is so very plain and lucid that it requires no explanatory remarks. His object is to draw the attention of the sick and afflicted to that fountain and source of life from which he received supplies of new health. He says:

"It is with sincere pleasure and gratitude I refer to your Paine's Celery Compound, and the wondrous blessings that I received from its use.

"To tell the truth, before using it I had little confidence in it, but concluded if it did me no good it could not make me any worse than I was.

"I had suffered for years from indigestion, liver complaint, and kidney disease, and began with Paine's Celery Compound in order to give it a thorough testing. After a fair use of the Compound I am as well as ever I was, and all my troubles have disappeared, and I am enjoying good health.

"Your medicine is a wonderful one; it is far superior to all others, as it truly gives life, and puts the entire system in a healthy condition. As a purifier of the blood I find it has no equal, and I heartily recommend its use to all sufferers."

Can stronger proof than the above be required to convince any sick and diseased man or woman that Paine's Celery Compound is the best medicine in the world?

Surely, dear reader, you will admit that it is worthy of a trial. You are seeking for new health, and therefore need the very best. Be sure you ask for and use only "Paine's," the only genuine celery prepar-

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher, That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The Napanee Express

NAPANEE, FRIDAY OCT. 9, 1896.

THE practice of presenting yearly each member of the Commons and Senate with a leather trunk and box of stationery holds good this year, but will hereafter be discontinued.

THE cabmen of Ottawa must have found times a trifle dull during this session of parliament as compared with former ones. Quite a few members who formerly ran up big bills for cab fares and charged same to the government, either had to walk or pay for their ride out of their own pocket, a decidedly new and unpleasant experience.

THERE has been considerable wailing over the dismissal of the Rev. H. C. Dixon, the stamp man at Toronto. Mr. Dixon seems to us to have the prevailing trait of Torontonians, namely, a desire to absorb all the good things. There are a lot of people who are never satisfied, the more they have the more they want, and if any little piece of "pap" is taken away from them, what a howl ensues. Mr. Dixon is well off, and does not need any assistance. His successor is poor and does need a little help.

DURING the session of Parliament just held at Ottawa there was a very plain statement made as to the public works of the Dominion, which were represented as being in a very bad state of repair, although large sums of money had been paid for the work and for maintenance. If the pavement in front of the Napanee postoffice is a fair sample of how work was scamped, the public works of Canada are a very poor asset against the very large indebtedness. The granolithic pavement cost $1,509.55, in addition to a "little bill" for preparation. Here are the

BROGUES AND SLANG.

THEIR POWERFUL INFLUENCE IN MODIFICATIONS IN OUR LANGUAGE

A Wide Field for Speculation—The Great Changes of the Pa t Glanced at in Attempting to Forecast the Future of the English Spoken Tongue.

What the English language has been in the past, and indeed how it came to be at all, has been made the subject of innumerable treatises, and, in fact, of textbooks to be studied in the common schools; but there remains a wide field for speculation as to the changes which the language may undergo in the future, says a writer in the Kansas City Star.

It is a reasonable supposition that whatever has changed may change further, and we all know that English has undergone numerous alterations. The Lord's prayer in the sort of English Wyclif used would undoubtedly be intelligible to heavenly ears, but hardly to those of a modern English-speaking person. We talk about the English of Shakespeare as being our own, yet some ingenious person has supported the theory that the English of Shakespeare's time as spoken was equivalent to the Irish brogue of to-day and that Hamlet's soliloquy when first pronounced "in public on the stage" sounded as "Shamus O'Brien" does now when given by the ordinary elocutionist. The historical theory underlying this is, of course, that the Irish continue to speak English as they heard it when extensively introduced in Ireland in the days of Elizabeth, while in England and other English-speaking countries it has changed to the "English as she is spoke" at present, whatever that may be.

The English language, more especially as spoken, has suffered change, and why should it not? An American grandfather and grandson seated at the same table do not speak the language with precise similarity, and why should they? The people who complain of the "corruption" and "perversion" of the English language, if by those expressions they mean its change, murmur without sufficient cause. A language is but a human instrument, which may be changed, amended, enlarged and restricted at the will of those who use it in their business. Possibly if Chaucer could revisit the earth he might pick up a volume of Tennyson's poems and conclude that English had been mightily "perverted" and "corrupted" since the time he wrote verses. But would he have any just ground for complaint?

But admitting that the English language, as we know it in America, has yet to undergo change, what is likely to be the nature of the change or changes? There is a colloquial expression, "He talks like a book," and it may be said that the great change to be made in colloquial English, in America at least, will be in the general conformation of spoken English to "book English." The effect of this will be the gradual dying out and loss of sectional and local dialects, which will be a loss indeed. The world will be the more monotonous when the man from Maine speaks the English language with the same pronunciation and accent as the man from Alabama; when the colored American from "Cherokee Georgia" speaks the same English as his brother in black from Savannah, neither of them using what we vaguely call the "negro dialect" of to-day. Yet there is reason to believe that such a time will come, and from a very evident cause—viz the establishment throughout the country, and in every part and portion of it, of the same system of common schools. Why should not a generation speak alike or approximate a common standard which uses the same spelling book and reader? The "book English" being the same throughout the United States, spoken English will approach conformity.

The English language is not merely a changing language, but a growing one. Every new edition of every standard dictionary is proof of this. With the years we gather words and words. Are we to infer from this that the

AN ECCENTRIC MILLIONAIRE'S LUXURIOUS SUMMER HOME.

Living Beneath a Lake and Breathing Air Supplied Through Mammoth Artificial Water Lillies—An Ambitious Scheme to Study Wild Nature.

The latest luxury in which millionaires may indulge is described by Truth this week. An Englishman, who has a lake upon his estate, recently caused it to be drained, and in the deepest part he had a house built, which contains smoking, dining and servants' rooms. The framework of the house is iron. The floor is of stone, resting upon a foundation of concrete. The sides and roof are composed of thick plate glass. There is a passage under the water from the boat house to the glass house, and air is obtained through large clumps of artificial water lilies which rest upon the surface of the lake.

It is indescribably pleasant to sit in one of the rooms upon a warm day. The air is cool; there is no sound to be heard, and it is interesting to watch the fish swimming around, attracted by the glare of the electric lights.

The house cost comparatively little to build. The owner contemplates a more ambitious scheme. He has two square miles of forest, which he intends to inclose by a wide, deep trench, a strong iron railing and high stone wall. He will then turn loose into the inclosure every sort of wild animal that he can procure, lions, tigers, elephants, etc., in order to ascertain if they can live at large in this climate and without unduly interfering with each other. There is to be a net-work of underground passages, leading to numerous stone towers in different places in the forest, and from these he intends to watch the animals and study their habits when in a comparatively wild state.

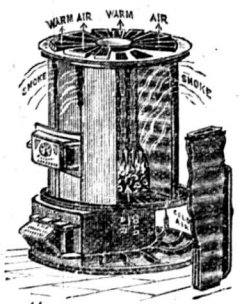
The Most Economical ...House Warmer



The "Kelsey" Corrugated Warm Air Generator.

Any ordinary Hot Air Furnace will produce heat if you will only supply enough fuel. The "Kelsey" has several special and valuable features but most important is that it will give more heat with less fuel and is the most durable heater made.

The "Kelsey" fire pot being constructed of several upright, tubular, corrugated, cast iron sections (see cut) around which the fire passes and up through which the cold air passes while being heated, and this entire section being wrapped with a heavy steel casing which becomes heated by the fire striking it when passing down outside of upright sections towards smoke pipe, it in turn warms the air that passes up between this steel casing and the galvanized iron casing, this explains why the "Kelsey" has three times more radiating surface and warm air capacity than an ordinary Furnace. The "Kelsey" heats every room evenly, wheresoever located, with a nice, mild, healthful warm air that will not injure your furniture.

The "Kelsey" will heat rooms 60 feet distant.

The "Kelsey" does not heat your cellar.

The "Kelsey" is absolutely gas and dust proof.

The Baby's Photograph.

Never take a child to the photographer's at a time which interferes with its meals or sleep.

Do not scold the child if it is restless; a tear-stained face often takes a long time to smile.

Dark dresses are best used on bright days; dark velvets should be especially avoided at such times.

Do not dress up the child; its everyday clothes are more comfortable and are more likely to induce a pleasant expression.

As the photographer's aim is always to secure the best result, leave the final posing to him; he will usually be guided, however, by your wishes.

Do not bring all your friends and relations to watch the photographing operations; the fewer people to attract attention in the studio, the more likelihood is there of the result being perfect.

Millinery and Bodices

Oats, wheat and even corn leaves are seen in some early autumn millinery, notably in hats that come out from London.

Boleros and jacket bodices which have been of lace through the summer now show in velvet to be worn over vests of sheer batiste embroidered in Renaissance patterns.

The separate bodice of silk is down in the list of autumn must-haves, again to replace the faithful cambric and batiste waist. The only novelty about them is that they will tone rather than contrast with their accompanying skirts.

FROM THE ASHES TO A LARGER LIFE.

The extensive establishment of the proprietors of Dodd's Kidney Pills, at Nos. 1 and 3 Jarvis street, with its contents, excepting the offices, was entirely destroyed by fire on the afternoon of the 15th ult. The fire broke out in an adjoining warehouse, but spread so rapidly that in less than ten minutes the employes of the Dodd's Medicine Co., from the laboratory, the advertising and the shipping departments, were all in panic flights for their lives. The perfect safety of all these persons once assured, and while more than 250 gross of Dodd's Kidney Pills, together with labels, wrappers and tons of advertising were being consumed, interest and effort all centered in the rescue from the advertising rooms of a mass of seemingly old and worthless letters. These, as afterwards learned, proved to be the accumulations of years consisting of thousands of testimonials from persons cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills, and dating from the inception of the business up to the day of the fire. These records of triumph, these proofs of the supreme merits of this great kidney treatment were the most precious of all the possessions of the firm, and were to be saved if possible, as they fortunately were, at the last possible moment. On the invitation of the president of the company a reporter of The News visited the quarters, located at Nos 6 and 8 Bay street, where new premises have been promptly opened. Here a rapid glance revealed many busy hands rushing the several details of completion of new goods to fill orders continuously arriving from all points in Canada, the United States and other parts of the world. Judging from the accumulated orders on file, of which the reporter got a glimpse, the output of Dodd's Kidney Pills is already almost beyond the conception, and one can easily understand that their merit alone can create such an incredible demand. Characteristic of the energy and enterprise of the Dodd's Medicine Co., it may be mentioned that, though absent in Buffalo during the fire, the manager was made aware of the probable extent and outcome of the disaster, and while the premises were still burning orders had been wired and goods from New York and other points were speeding towards Toronto for the reproduction of Dodd's Kidney Pills, so that no order should remain unfilled.—Toronto News.

the years we gather words and words. Are we to infer from this that the ordinary vocabulary of the talking citizen is to be greatly increased in the future? Not necessarily. The added words are largely technical and scientific, resulting from the immense acquisitions of knowledge in the field of the arts and sciences. The list of words which an English-speaking man absolutely must have to express joy, grief, hatred, contempt, affection and so on has not been materially increased. This may be seen in the history of profanity. Our ancestors indulged in imprecations and elaborate blasphemies unknown in this age, but what may be called "plain swearing" is in the same terms as for ages past and wherever English is spoken.

Oom Paul.

Here is another characteristic story about the President of the Transvaal. In the days when Johannesburg was merely Ferreira's mining camp, Kruger was one day riding over the Witwatersrand in ordinary burgher attire. He off-saddled near a wagon owned by a German. The Teuton did not recognize the President, and held forth on the many things he would do were he ruler of the state. Suddenly Oom Paul, to the great astonishment of the German, who was a very small man, took off his coat, and holding it out toward the stranger, said: "Put this on." "But," replied the latter, "it's too big." Just so," replied His Honor with a grim smile, "I'm Paul Kruger and it's not too big for me."

New Insulating Material.

A new insulating material is being introduced to the electrical trade. It consists of powdered silex, a mineral resembling mica in its pure state, which is packed in wrought iron pipes, in which is centralized the electrical conductor. The lengths of pipe are joined by very tight sleeve couplings, and the outlets are hermetically sealed with a mica cap and shellac, through which the conductor projects. The silex has some properties which render it of special value for electrical work. It is a remarkable non-conductor of heat and an excellent electric insulator, and it is stated by the projectors of this new enterprise that they have on a test succeeded in fusing a wire insulated by this method, but since the insulation surrounding the wire was incombustible there was really no place for the fused metal to run, and after the current was withdrawn the metal resolidified, and the metallic and electrical continuity of the wire was restored to its original condition. Silex in this form is said to be remarkably non-hydroscopic; therefore there is no danger of the insulation being impaired by moisture.

Treatment of Burns.

Dr. Poggi, a French surgeon, has found that the addition of a few teaspoonfuls of potassium nitrate to a bath, into which the burnt part is plunged, will quickly cause cessation of the pain. After a time the water becomes heated and the pain returns, but again subsides on the addition of another quantity of salt. Professor Vergely has obtained good results by covering the burn parts with a paste prepared by mixing calcined magnesia with a certain quantity of water and allowing it to dry on the skin, renewing it as soon as it becomes detached. Under this treatment it is said that the wounds heal well and pain is prevented.

Asbestos in Boot Soles.

It is proposed to use asbestos in the soles of boots. Asbestos wool, pressed by hydraulic force into thin sheets, water-proofed on one side, is to be inserted as the middle sole. Asbestos is a non-conductor of heat, and, in conjunction with a water-proofed material, will have the effect of counteracting the influence of heat, cold and moisture.

The Latest Fashions

NEW TAILOR-MADE GIRL.

There is a new tailor-made girl this fall. She has lost much of her severity of style and has actually consented to give up her linen collars and cuffs and her much-beloved waistcoat.

The new tailor-made gown, fashioned strictly up-to-date, must have the small sleeve and the plain skirt. But then, if made severely plain, it would be a costume few women would dare attempt. The dictators of fashion have realized this, hence the new tailor-made gown for the fall of '96.

All the best tailor-made gowns this year have what is called the plain skirt. It hangs straight and plain in front, without gores, the fullness all drawn toward the back. Last season's skirt, even though tailor-made, had many a ripple.

The basque is another novel feature of the new tailor-made gown. It fits rather tightly over the hips, rippling a trifle at the back, or it opens directly in the back, folding over in revers, which are frequently fastened with tiny buttons.

The collar is perhaps the most unique part of the costume. Instead of being an inconspicuous coat collar as of old, it is a decidedly flaring affair, well stiffened and most conspicuous. silk is used for this purpose. A good quality of changeable taffeta is most in favor. It will frequently happen this fall that the lining of a tailor gown will be equally as expensive as the material itself.

The boucle cloths will be worn, but, of course, they are not classed with the fall novelties. It is only in the arrangement of their soft, silky loops that they differ from last year—then the loops were evenly distributed over the material, now they are arranged in patches.

Ottoman cloth promises to be one of the most popular materials of the coming season. It is shown in a great variety of designs. The ottoman cloth in two colors is a distinct novelty. The foundation is generally of some light shades with the ribs in a dark color. The ribbing is so close together that but little of the ground work shows. The plain ottomans come in both coarse and fine ribs, and make serviceable as well as charming gowns.

New Silk Waists.

Now that the shirtwaist days are over one would suppose that the band necktie, so closely associated with it, would also take its departure. But this fall this chic little necktie has taken a new lease of life, owing to the popularity of the changeable silk waists.

The newest come in a variety of color combinations. Changeable golden brown and green silk makes an effective waist, also deep blue shading into a soft olive green.

The majority of these silk shirt waists are made without lining, but for wear during the cooler autumn days they may be bought not only lined, but as stiffly boned as an ordinary cloth bodice.

These waists are the present substitute of the cotton shirt waist, and are made in exactly the same design. In addition to this they are worn with a stiff linen collar and cuffs. They do not button down the front, but are made to be fastened with studs.

TO MARKET PRODUCE

FORESIGHT AND HINDSIGHT BOTH REQUIRED FOR SUCCESS.

The Best Grain Market the Farmer Can Have Is His Own Barnyard – The Shortest Possible Time a Large Factor in Satisfactory Results.

This takes one away back many month before the harvest. The first requisite toward the profitable selling of the farmer's produce is having first-class produce to sell. To insure this the farmer should use only the best seed, begin planning to sell with the first furrow he plows, furnish crop best plant food and best cultivation. So with fruit. The one who is mulching, spraying, pruning and cultivating is even then taking the first steps toward selling well. Nothing grown on the farm responds so readily to early fostering care as fruit. Berries of all kinds will be larger, firmer, freer from imperfections, while disease and insects will be kept in abeyance. Apples will be free from the work of the codlin moth, larger and finer quality, and thus they sell themselves.

Unquestionably the best market for grain is the farmer's own barnyard, poultry yard and pig pen. All cereals ought to be thus used. Sold as pork and beef, corn, wheat and other grains bring far more remunerative prices. The profit on fowls can be safely estimated at 100 per cent. A large item of gain is the fertility which the keeping of stock leaves on the farm. A farmer said to me: "I can't afford to sell corn; never sold a bushel in my life. I sell pork."

Beef, pork and mutton must be fitted for the selling in the shortest possible time. There is no margin on long fattening for cattle, pigs or sheep. Then the cost of transporting to market is very much less in this compact form than in the whole cereal. Those who cannot follow this ought to sell early. It is rarely wise to hold grain for a higher price. If stored at home, it is safe to count off 10 per cent. for waste, shrinkage, mice, etc. If stored in elevator, storage and insurance must be paid, and loss of interest on the money is an item not to be overlooked. Experience has taught me to sell when produce is ready, unless prices are at the lowest ebb and there is an almost absolute certainty that they will advance.

The marketing of fruits and vegetables requires most careful attention on account of their perishable nature. The best results are obtained by organized effort. In a neighboring town a on account of their perishable nature. The best results are obtained by organized effort. In a neighboring town a fruit growers' association has been perfected. One member is at the depot throughout the season to receive and ship on the early morning train. He ships direct to retailers, thus avoiding commission men. No inferior fruit is handled and the members have won a reputation and a ready sale for their fruit, claiming excellent returns. The quicker the transit from garden to customer, the better the condition and the less danger of loss.

One weak point is allowing too many middlemen to handle our production. The hope of the future for farmers is in co-operation. Another weak point is that farmers do not study the market conditions and changes. One important fact of which the farmer should never lose sight is that to insure success in selling, hard thinking must go right along with hard work, and unless he uses brain as well as muscle he need not expect golden opportunities to roost on the fences in his back yard.—Mrs. M. D. Cole, in Farm and Home.

Some Good Ideas.

Economy in poultry raising should cover not only economy of food and of cash outlay, says a writer in Farm Poultry, but equally important, economy of time.

To illustrate: My henteries and yards are quite a distance from my house, being farther up the hill, which gives to my place its name of Hillside ranch. Being a firm believer in lots of exercise for all classes of fowls I like mine to get out on the runs early and put in a good half hour's work scratching for the millet thrown under the sheds the night before. This I call their sunrise appetizer for the mash which follows later.

I save all the time and all the steps required to go out and open the various houses by having a fish line running from the door of each to my bedroom windows. Each of these lines, strung on screw pulleys on the intervening trees, passes over a pully outside my window and has a sash weight at that end. At the other end it is attached to a weighted drop door, the only kind I now use, requiring no hinges, catches, etc.

As soon as my alarm clock wakes me I merely pull down the sash weights and immediately from my window I can see a rush of hungry, lively birds from each house. Thus, while I'm rubbing the sleep out of my eyes, then dressing and preparing their mash, they get a half-hour of the liveliest kind of exercise, and all before I set a foot out of doors. At night again I close the houses from my window in the same way.

Again, I use inclined dropboards, hinged to the wall, the bottoms resting on the floor. Above these, three rows of roosts, parallel to the walls, are also hinged to it. Boards and roost are raised and lowered by cords running over pulleys to balance weights outside.

Just here many readers will say: "Pshaw, we've done that for years!" Hold on; here's what I'm coming to. I make the dropboards of clapboards, thin edges uppermost. This makes an incline made up of a series of smaller inclines, which afford, when well dusted, the ideal self-cleaning dropboard. In the morning I raise it a few inches by the cord outside and let it fall sharply, which cleans off the least particle remaining, so that when I enter each house I find the droppings, all so well rolled in dust as to be clean and odorless. These, in this form, it is but the work of a moment to scoop up and drop through a trap door into a box below.

How to Shake Rugs.

When shaking rugs or mats that are small enough to be done with the hands, always hold them by the middle at the sides, not at the ends, for by the latter handling the corners will soon be made to whip out, and the fringe or binding to pull off.

Dated at Napanee September 24th, 1896.

Not Many Changes for the Fall and Winter of 1896-7.

There are fewer modifications in men's dress for the autumn and winter of 1896-7 than there have been for several years. Golf and cycling, perhaps, have had the lion's share of these. The Norfolk jacket has been replaced by the sack-coat for both of the pastimes, and a man may leave his office and with a very few changes of costume can emerge from, say Wall street, as an example, to the downs of Long Island, a full-fledged golfer, or be fully equipped for his afternoon spin on his wheel. As in previous years, the knickerbocker was gradually discarded for riding costume in the city during the afternoon, so will it disappear from the cyclist's wardrobe. The "knicker" is picturesque in summer, and in the vacation season it has been the predominating feature of man's sporting and neglige costume. In winter, unless one lives in the country, the prevailing American idea is to change rapidly without any apparent effort, from every-day dress to that adapted for any pastime or specialty. The leather strap used to keep down long trousers in riding has also found its way into the outfit of the wheelman and golfer. In fact, unless one belongs to a club and is obliged to don a dress of a peculiar cut, it is considered only the mark of an amateur and a greenhorn to appear in a rig for the occasion. At a match this is another story, but ordinarily the very caddies will laugh at you. The club uniforms are, however, quite varied.

The cloth which is to be used for lounge, morning or business suits this autumn, must therefore be as appropriate for golf or wheeling as for the office or the street. Tweeds and cheviots still lead, the colors in favor being grays and browns, and the ever-useful shepherd's plaid. In London the browns have had their day, and the prevailing note in color is gray. There have been already seen in this country some very smart lounge suits made of gray worsted. There is no change in the shape of the sack coat, which is, as it was last year, rather loose to the figure. The trousers are ordinarily wide. The official measurements are about nineteen inches around the knees, and about seventeen and a half at the bottom.—Harper's Bazar.

ST. PETER'S MARVELS

A GLANCE WITHIN AND A VIEW WITHOUT ITS WONDERFUL DOME.

A Strange Perspective Which Has in It a Touch of the Wierd—The Insignificance of Human Beings Plainly Evident From a Glance at Busy Streets.

The strangest, most extravagant, most incomprehensible, most disturbing sight of all is to be seen from the upper gallery in the cupola looking down to the church below. Hanging in midair, with nothing under one's feet, one sees the church projected in perspective within a huge circle. It is as though one saw it upside down and inside out. Few men could bear to stand there without that bit of iron railing between them and the hideous fall, and the inevitable slight dizziness which the strongest head feels may make one doubt for a moment whether what is really the floor below may not be in reality a ceiling above, and whether one's sense of gravitation be not inverted in an extraordinary dream. At that distance human beings look no bigger than flies, and the canopy of the high altar might be an ordinary table.

And thence, climbing up between the double domes, one may emerge from the almost terrible persepective to the open air, and suddenly see all Rome at one's feet, and all the Roman mountains stretched out to south and east, in perfect grace of outline, shoulder to shoulder, like shadowy women lying side by side and holding hands.

And the broken symmetry of streets and squares ranges below, cut by the winding ribbon of the yellow Tiber; to the right the low Aventine, with the dark cypresses of the protestant cemetery beyond, and the Palatine, crested with trees and ruins; the Pincian on the left, with its high gardens, and the mass of foliage of the Villa Medici behind it; the lofty tower of the capitol in the midst of the city, and the sun clasping to its heart of gold the just and the unjust, the new and the old alike, past and present, youth, age and decay—generous as only the sun

science

Science is "knowing how." The only secret about Scott's Emulsion is years of science. When made in large quantities and by improving methods, an emulsion must be more perfect than when made in the old-time way with mortar and pestle a few ounces at a time. This is why Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil never separates, keeps sweet for years, and why every spoonful is equal to every other spoonful. An even product throughout.

In other emulsions you are liable to get an uneven benefit—either an over or under dose. Get Scott's. Genuine has a salmon-colored wrapper.

Mind Your Liver.

Most of the ailments which are commonly called "bilious" are caused by too much food of a rich nature, and too much drink of a sweet or alcoholic character, combined with far too little exercise in the open air. The liver attempts to get rid of the superfluous materials thrown into the circulation, and, being overworked, rebels, and gout, rheumatism, gravel, dyspepsia, headache and constipation are the outward and visible signs of its inaction in those who live too well a sedentary life, according to the British Medical Journal.

The prescription of a bicycle and the recommendation to use it wisely and well works like a charm in such cases, and in all the sympathetic ailments which arise from too much "acid" in the system. It is interesting to note that cycling sometimes has the effect of thinning the obese and fattening the thin, and this may partly be explained by Murchison's observations that excessive leanness, as well as excessive corpulence, is often caused by inaction of the liver, and the stimulus of regular exercise, setting the functions of that organ right, causes the disappearance of what was only a symptom.

A Giant Flame.

A new wrinkle in repair shop outfitting has been devised at the Illinois Central Railroad car shops, where the old paint is expeditiously and cheaply removed from passenger cars by an unusually large gasoline carburetting machine, designed at these shops. The machine consists of a gasoline tank and decay—generous as only the sun can be in this sordid, miserly world, where bread is but another name for blood, and a rood of growing corn means a pound of human flesh. The sun is the only good thing in nature that always gives to man for nothing but the mere trouble of sitting in the sunshine, and Rome without sunlight is a very grim and gloomy town today, says a writer in The Century.

It is worth the effort of climbing so high. Four hundred feet in the air, you look down on what ruled half the world by force for ages, and on what rules the other half to-day by faith—the greatest center of conquest and of discord and of religion which the world has ever seen. A thousand volumes have been written about it by a thousand wise men. A word will tell you what it has been—the heart of the world. Hither was drawn the world's blood by all the roads that lead to Rome, and hence, it was forced out again along the mighty arteries of the Caesars' road to be spilled in the Caesars' battles—to redden the world with the Roman name. Blood, blood, and more blood, that was the history of old Rome—the blood of brothers, the blood of foes, the blood of martyrs without end. It flowed and ebbed in varying tide at the will of the just and unjust, but there was always more to shed, and there were always more hands to shed it. And so it may be again hereafter, for the name of Rome has a heart-stirring ring, and there has always been as much blood spilled for the names of things as for the things themselves.

"My, I was scared. I thought my swinging shelf of jellies and preserves had given way."

Texas's Big Hog.

Texas is not only the biggest state in the Union, but lays claim to the biggest hog ever raised in the United States. The hog weighs 1430 pounds, and is 8 feet 3 inches long. He measures 6 feet around the neck, 8 feet around the body, and stands 4 feet 1 inch high. His feet are as large as those of a common ox, and the leg bone larger than that of the largest steer. He is Poland China and red Jersey. He eats corn like an ox; takes the whole ear in his mouth at once, and eats the cob as well as the corn, eating from forty to fifty ears at a time. There seems to be no surplus flesh on him, and physicians who have examined the hog say he can easily be made to reach 2200 pounds. The present owner, T. Ratigan, paid $250 for the hog, and has been offered $1500 for him. He has a fire policy on the animal for $5000. No other hog, it is said, ever reached such tremendous proportions. We expect to learn soon that he has been burned.—Monticello Press.

Not Ashamed to Wash Dishes.

In a recent sketch of Hawthorne by his daughter we are told that in his early married life he helped his wife, who was not strong, by doing the housework. He washed the dishes, cleaned knives and cooked. All this he did without "surly innuendoes and sudden snarlings." The great romancer did not shrink from unromantic work. His good sense puts to shame some lesser lights in literature who have counted it a thing common and unclean to work with their hands, even in using the pen.

The Dolley Luncheon.

The "sewing bee" has been revived in a somewhat modernized form in the "dolley luncheon." All the guests at one of these functions are provided with a square of stamped linen and the silks to embroider it and are set to work. After an hour's stitching, the hostess collects the work, a committee judges of its merits, prizes are awarded, and the luncheon proceeds, the wise giver of the feast having received a more or less valuable addition to her linen chest.

Patti's Jewels.

Mme. Adelina Patti is said to have the handsomest and largest collection of jewels of any of the modern actresses and opera singers. She lately wore in the third act of "La Traviata" a dress covered with precious stones to the value of £100,000. These stones are now in Paris to be reset in the shape of a tulip-like corselet, formed of seven leaves, from which the mousseline de soie bodice will merge all in fluffs and puffs.

Hit a Tender Spot.

"You grievously offended Mabel Gray's father last night."

"How?"

"By making that pun about the alum-entary canal."

"I don't see how that could offend him."

"Don't you? He's a manufacturer of baking powder."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

She Imbued Western Notions.

Mme. Hanna Korany, who remained in New York for a year after the close of the World's Fair, to which she came as a delegate, has gone back to her home in Syria, so deeply imbued with Western notions that she has started a women's club. It is near her home, in Beirut, and is the first to be established in that part of the world.

A Royal Swimmer.

The Czarina of Russia is an expert swimmer, and recently had a magnificent swimming tank erected in the Winter Palace, covering an area of 1400 square feet.

Foresight.

"When a Chinaman is introduced to a woman he always asks her how old she is."

"Why does he do that?"

"Wants to make her so mad at him that she won't try to marry him."

HOUSING THE POOR.

THE WAGE-EARNER HAS A DEEP INTEREST IN THIS SUBJECT.

How Proper Housing Assists to Conserve Earning Power—The Great Drain on a Community's Effectiveness by Reason of Sickness.

What are the wage-earner's special interests in improved housing? In the first place, this class is vitally interested in the conservation of health. Good health means earning power, and, as workingmen lead more or less of a hand-to-mouth existence, any loss of earning power is a serious matter, says a writer in The Century. Lord Beaconsfield aptly voiced this truth in an address delivered at the opening of some new blocks of improved tenements in London. He said: "The health of the people is really the foundation upon which all their happiness and their power depends." Few realize the loss of productive energy through sickness brought about by bad living environments. Sir James Paget, the distinguished English physician, estimates that the whole population of England between 15 and 65 years old works in each year 20,000,000 of weeks less than they might if it were not for sickness. He puts down the loss inflicted on wage-earners at nearly $15,000,000 annually. He refers simply to a purely preventable loss. Some years ago the London health authorities instituted inquiries in certain low neighborhoods to estimate the value of labor lost in a year, not by sickness, but from sheer exhaustion induced by unfavorable surroundings. It was found that, upon the lowest average, every worker lost about twenty days in the year from this cause. One might go on multiplying such instances, but it is not necessary to enforce the argument by cumulative citation.

Wage-earners are vitally interested in the passage and enforcement of wise sanitary laws. Bad sanitation entails proportionately worse economic consequences to them than to the more highly favored. They are also more often the victim of sickness and epidemics fostered by insanitary neighborhoods. The workingman has a positive interest in using whatever political power he possesses to secure legal remedies against uninhabitable houses through expropriation laws, such as those current in England, and the measure recently put into operation by the Board of Health of New York city under the tenement house law of 1895. Who, if not wage-earners, are interested in the obliteration of rookeries, where the death rate equals 73 in 1000? Whatever promotes better living conditions, no matter whether it comes from legal enactment or private effort, will find support from wage-earners who appreciate their true interests.

Important as are the physical and economic aspects of this question, they are not even the chief considerations. Ethical issues have greater ultimate significance. Many of our moral and social ills are more nearly connected with bad housing than appears upon the surface. Take for example, drunkenness. How absurd to suppose that immoderate liquor-drinking can be suppressed so long as people are left to live in houses where lack of elementary sanitation saps vitality, while noisomeness and unattractiveness impels a search for outside relief. It is entirely unjust to suppose that only a low impulse to debauch or a reckless disregard of family duties leads wage-earners to contract the "saloon habit." The utter dullness, the lack of individuality in tenement house existence, often lie back of the fatal temptation.

Choose Their Associates

Two of my friends, both noble women, live next door to each other; they have each one child, a son. One of the young men is a gentleman in everything that makes a true man; the other is a perfect rake, familiar with nearly every sin in the catalogue, yet he was one of the noblest little boys I have ever known. One allowed her son to associate only with those boys she knew to be honorable; the

CAUGHT BY A DREAM.

Ingenious Scheme of a Girl to Bring George to the Point.

He had been paying attention to her for a long time and seemed to be slow in putting into practice any of the beautiful theories of love and domestic comfort and all that sort of thing with which he had very often beguiled the happy hours. She thought she might bring him to the scratch, but she did not want to make it altogether too plain. She thought that under a kind of allegory she might "fetch" him. So the next time he came he found her in the garden reclining in a hammock. An open book was lying beside her, her hand carelessly resting upon it; the other hand was gracefully posed pressing her back hair; her eyes were fixed dreamily on the cloudless blue, seen through the interlaced foliage of the trees. He approached. Apparently she heard him not. He looked at the picture a moment while she was steeped in reverie. He spoke.

She gave a little start, and gently rubbed her eyes.

"It is you, George, is it?" she cried softly. "I was dreaming."

'Dreaming! And what were you dreaming of?"

"It was silly—ridiculous. I won't tell you."

'Do tell me.'

'No—it was so silly."

"Do tell me what it was.'

'Well, you won't laugh at me," she said coyly.

"No, indeed I won't."

"I dreamed that I was married, and I was living in a pretty little cottage all covered with honeysuckle and woodbine and roses, and my husband—"

'Was he like?"

"He was a very nice-looking man. He had beautiful dark hair and eyes, and he was tall."

George made no remark. George was blonde and short.

"But you know, George," she said, after the pause had grown a little awkward, "dreams always go by contraries."

George saw the point.—Larks.

SONG OF THE BURDEN BEARER.

Over the narrow footpath
That led from my lowly door,
I went with a thought of the Master,
As oft I had walked before,
My heart was heavily laden,
And with tears my eyes were dim;
But I knew I should lose the burden,
Could I get a glimpse of Him.

Over the trodden pathway,
To the fields all shorn and bare,
I went with a step that faltered,
And a face that told of care,
I had lost the light of the morning,
With its shimmer of sun and dew;
But a gracious look of the Master
Would the strength of morn renew.

While yet my courage wavered,
And the sky before me blurred,
I heard a voice behind me
Saying a tender word,
And I turned to see the brightness
Of heaven upon the road,
And suddenly, lost the pressure
Of the weary, crushing load.

Nothing that hour was altered,
I had still the weight of care;
But I bore it now with gladness,
Which comes of answered prayer,
Not a grief of the soul can fetter,
Nor cloud its vision, when
The dear Lord gives the spirit
To breathe to His will, Amen.

A TELEPATHIC TIP.

A telegram for your, sir.

It was the morning of the Derby day, and I had just looked into the office before starting for Epsom. I was at the time on the staff of the Sporting Courier, and besides giving what is known in the sporting world, as "midday finals," I usually "did" the home meetings.

I took the telegram and tore it open. The message surprised me, for it ran:

"Don Pero is bound to win.—Dixey."

I read it again and again. Don Pero was a rank outsider, and had been looked upon by everybody as not having the slightest chance of a place. For confirmation one had only to look at the "latest London betting" to find that the horse stood at fifty to one. Yet Dixey, the trainer, had never before misled me, and I could not help feeling that there must be something in it. Dixey knew what he was doing, and, as he was always counted as one of the smart men, I determined to do what in another case would have been ridiculous on the face of it.

I sat down at my desk and wrote out my copy. It ran as follows:

"There is no denying the fact that the favorite is in excellent condition, but I think that he will be just beaten by a horse whose qualifications have hitherto been completely overlooked. My final selection is one that perhaps will not be acceptable to the majority of my readers, but as I am in possession of the most exclusive information, I have no hesitation in placing the three horses in this order:

1—Don Pero.
2—Windemere.
3—Nervine.

I was just thinking about starting when the chief sent for me.

"What does this mean, Mr. Goodman?" he said, as I entered the room. "This," evidently referring to my MS., which he held in his hand.

"Are you referring to my Derby tip, sir?" I asked.

"Yes; I am. Surely you can find a better horse than Don Pero?"

"Not to beat it," I said.

"But it's a fifty to one chance!"

"I can't help that," I replied, rather haughtily, perhaps; "but I am assured that he is bound to win."

"Assured! By whom, pray?"

"Pardon me," I answered, "but my information is obtained from a strictly private source. I'll alter the wording of the paragraph, if you like, but I should prefer that it goes in as it is."

"I have no wish to interfere in your department," replied the chief. "Let it stand, if you are sweet upon it. If he comes off, it will be all right. If not, well, we shall be the laughing stock of everybody, from the Jockey club down to the youngest Newmarket tout."

I did not think that it was worth while having an argument about the matter, so took the opportunity of closing the interview and took a cab to Waterloo. When I reached the course I made the best of my way to the paddock in the hope of seeing Dixey and having a talk with him before racing began, but he was nowhere to be seen.

axed determination upon his boyish face.

"Now, they're off," is the cry. No, it is a false report. The favorite has broken away. His supporters standing around me are quivering with excitement, and many of them gave vent to audible groans.

The horses face the starter once more and in another minute we see the white flag fail, and know that they have been dispatched on their fateful journey.

In the first part of the race they seem to be all together, but as they near Tattenham corner, the favorite begins to steal ahead. I looked for Don Pero—he is nearly last. The corner is turned with Windemere well in front.

"The favorite wins! The favorite romps home!" is the cry on all hands.

But what is that steadily creeping up on the outside? As I live it is Don Pero! But, stay! The favorite appears to be holding his own as the horses race into the straight. But Don Pero will not be shaken off and he gradually bears the leader down, down, as they near home.

"The favorite! The favorite!" is the cry that rings in my ears. Ten thousand voices seem to be concentrated into one gigantic roar as the horses reach the winning post and the blue riband of the turf is once more won.

It is doubtful to tell from where we are standing which horse has won, but it appears to be the favorite, although Don Pero was extremely close up. At length the numbers appear on the telegraph board:

I could hardly believe my eyes. Sixteen is Don Pero's number, 24 Windemere's, and four that of another outsider.

There was a deadly silence all around. No enthusiasm, no shouting, no jubilation of any kind. Blank despair is plainly written on the majority of faces near me. Then one of my colleagues turned to me:

"What does it mean, Goody? You are evidently in the know."

"It means," I said, determined to have my revenge upon them, "that if you want to get a correct tip you must come to me," and with that parting shot I hastened to the paddock, where boys she knew to be honorable; the other allowed her son the privilege of choosing his own associates. She believed he chose only the best. Alas, for misplaced confidence!

This subject of associates for our children is one that should concern every mother. Sooner or later it confronts us in a realistic manner, because it will become a reality in our own homes and our children will be the ones to receive either censure or praise and the mother will be the one on whom the sorrow or gladness will descend as the outcome of her child's associations.—Eliza Renan in Minneapolis Housekeeper.

The Farm-Home Lawn.

There are but few things which, at small expense, add so much to the appearance of a farm-home as a well-kept lawn. In order that it may aid materially in beautifying the place, it is not necessary that the lawn be either large in area or elaborate in design. It may be very small and very simple, yet if it is kept clean, and the grass short and even, it will greatly add to the attractiveness of the home to which it belongs. Such a lawn almost any farmer can have simply by taking care of it. The beauty of the lawn itself, to say nothing of the improved appearance of the farm, will pay most liberally for the little time and labor required to keep it in good condition.—Rural World.

System in Road Repairing.

Keeping up repairs at the proper level will continually shape the road bed, and one load of gravel will do the work more than ten loads as heretofore dumped in the center. The usual custom upon well-kept roads is the constant employment of one man with tools and wheelbarrow or hand cart, at $1.25 per day—calculating the working days possible in a year as 240 days—to every five miles of pike.—Dayton (O.) Herald.

"Aren't you glad to see it clearing off?" said the cheerful man.

"Oh," replied the man who kicks. "I d'no. I don't see why we mightn't ez well be worryin' 'bout wet weather ez 'bout hot weather."—Washington Star.

Irresistible Proof That There is a Cure for Diabetes.

The following sworn statement is the best proof that diabetes is not incurable, and that there is a remedy which will cure it.

Ontario, County of Carleton, to wit:

I, Charles Moss, of the City of Ottawa, in the County of Carleton, Blacksmith, do hereby solemnly declare as follows:

1. I reside at 180 Bell Street, in the said City of Ottawa.

2. For the past fifteen years I have been a great sufferer from kidney disease; among the prominent symptoms of which were severe pains in my back, hot flashes extending from the base of the spine up between my shoulders, dizziness, headaches, etc. I was in a bad state generally and suffered great agony at times. The intense pain prevented my sleeping, and I seemed to get worse continually. The doctors who were called in pronounced my disease diabetes, but their treatment did no good, and they held out but slight hope of my recovery. I was then so far gone with the disease that I could not turn in bed without help. My urine was of a dark wine color, and full of sediment.

3. I took all kinds of medicine, but without permanent relief.

4. Hearing of Doan's Kidney Pills I got a box at H. P. MacCarthy's drug store, but having been so often disappointed I had no faith in them. However, I started taking them, and they struck the right spot at once, and I commenced to get better. From that time on improvement was continuous until I am now, after five weeks' use of Doan's Kidney Pills, entirely free from pain of any kind. The urine is natural, and I am now working right along every day in my shop.

5. It is a great source of pleasure for me to testify to the world of the curative powers of Doan's Kidney Pills, and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

"But I told you that I wanted my eggs boiled three minutes."

"Thot's thrue, mum—but there was tree eggs, mum, an tree times tree is ncine."

"Your lawn is beautiful, Mr. Wilkins—it's just like a carpet," said the visitor.

"Indeed it is," said Wilkins, proudly. "Why, our hired man the other day in a fit of absent-mindedness got out the carpet-sweeper to sweep it instead of the lawn mower."

"And is Jennie thorough in her work?" asked Mrs. Jarley of Mrs. Perkins, having reference to a would-be waitress.

"Very!" said Mrs. Perkins. "When she broke one of my royal Worcester soup plates she really didn't appear satisfied until she had broken the other eleven. Oh, yes, Jennie is thorough."—Harper's Bazar.

Mr. Bennett's Queer Memory.

James Gordon Bennett of the New York Herald has a strange and erratic memory, according to the San Francisco Wave. One day, having bought a number of new shirts he ordered them sent immediately to the office. The parcel duly arrived and remained there for over a year. Mr. Bennett, meantime, never putting in an appearance. Suddenly, without any notice, he rushed in one morning, evidently in a state of great perturbation. The staff concluded they were all to be discharged on the spot. Mr. Bennett excitedly asked: "Have those confounded fellows sent my shirts along?" He never even alluded to the lapse of time which had occurred since his last visit.

Party Bell Fashions.

Some of the rich ribbons show artistic effects in the combination of navy [illegible] and dress materials.

From the cheapest serge to the handsomest of velvet black goods will be worn this fall in heavy, medium and transparent weights.

Few black, close-fitting cloth jackets are seen. They are generally light tan color. Box sacques will grow in favor as the season advances.

Sleeveless jackets are a rage in Paris and are becoming popular here. They are finished with epaulets of lace and Arabic filo embroidery.

Velvet, satin, taffeta, moire, brocade, chiffon, net, mousseline, gauze, cheviot, serge, Eudora, mohair, broadcloth, camel's-hair fabrics, and many other fancy dress goods will be worn in solid and figured effects.

Her Mouth Like an Elephant's.

It is said that a certain well-known portrait painter has almost as great a reputation for joking as for taking excellent likenesses. One evening he was speaking of a beautiful young girl whose portrait he had just finished: "Her features are exquisitely molded, I have heard," said a lady who had seen neither the portrait nor its original. "Beautiful forehead and eyes," returned the artist, concisely, "handsome nose, fine chin, but mouth like an elephant's." "Mouth like an elephant's!" echoed the lady in dismay. "What a terrible misfortune. Do you mean that it is so enormous and—what do you mean?" "Only that it is filled with superb ivory," returned the artist, with his usual gravity.—London Tit-Bits.

Market Lambs Quickly.

One point is clearly settled in the sheep business, viz., the advantage in marketing at an early age. Lambs have a decided advantage over yearlings both in selling value and cost of production, so that all mutton should go to market under present conditions in the form of well-ripened lambs, except such as it may be necessary to hold longer for breeding purposes. The lamb sells for nearly a dollar a hundred more than the mature sheep, and makes gain at about one-third less expense. This difference is so marked that it is the cause of considerable distinction in lambs of different size.—Colman's Rural World.

An Effective Disguise.

"They say Bassy's girl did not recognize him when he called the other night."

"No. He wore his bicycle face."

fore racing began, but he was nowhere to be seen.

I soon found out that some of my colleagues wanted to have a chat with me, for the Sporting Courier. My final in had created quite a sensation.

Jimmy Berners, the "starter," was very forcible in his language and said some very nasty things about my inability to provide the racing world with information that was of any value.

I really began to feel a bit nervous about the matter myself, for it seemed so absurd that a horse of Don Pero's caliber should have any chance of winning the classic event.

Then the horrible thought rushed through my head that the telegram was a hoax, and I felt a cold perspiration break out all over me. As a matter of fact, I did not care a brass farthing which horse won, but I knew that my reputation as a tipster was at stake. If Don Pero should finish last, as on form he undoubtedly should, then my vocation was gone, and with it perhaps my bread and cheese, to say nothing of the other luxuries. It was in no happy frame of mind that I made my way to the press box.

My entrance gave the cue for a burst of hilarity, and my reception was exceedingly warm. They chaffed me unmercifully about my unfortunate tip, but I took it all in good part, while inwardly vowing that I would fire off some of my suppressed anger upon Dixey, if his precocious outsider finished where everybody expected him to finish—last.

The race for the Derby stakes was the next item on the card. There is no need for me to enter into any lengthy description of the event, but it is just necessary to mention one or two facts about the most sensational derby on record, and one that will never be forgotten by those who had the good fortune to witness it. The preliminary canters gave supporters of the favorite, Windermere, great cause for much gratification. He certainly looked like a grand creature, fit to run for a king's ransom.

I nervously looked around for Don Pero. Yes, he was there all right, but what an ill-favored looking animal compared with the others. His jockey, too, was merely a stable lad, but I thought that I detected a gleam of confidence in his eye and a look of come to me," and with that parting shot I hastened to the paddock, where I saw Dixey surrounded by a crowd of inquiring sportsmen. When he was tolerably free I went up to him, shook his hand and heartily congratulated him. He bore his success with equanimity, for nobody had ever yet seen Dixey put out or flurried either by success or failure.

"Thanks very much for the wire, old man," I said, in the course of the conversation.

"Wire?" he replied, with a look of surprise on his face. "What wire?"

"Why, you wired me your horse would win."

"What on earth are you talking about, Goody? I never wired to you."

"Well, I got the wire here," I said, as I felt in my pocket for it. But it was not there. I searched each pocket, but in vain. I must have left it at the office. Dixey began to laugh.

"How do you think I should have tipped such an outsider if I had not heard from you?" I asked him, almost angrily.

"Hush, not so loud," said Dixey, looking round in a half-frightened manner. "You fancy I wired to you. Quite a mistake, I assure you. I intended to do so, but I thought it would be no good. That's all, Goody, really."

I saw it all. Dixey had sent the telegram and didn't want anybody to know that he had done so. All right. I would keep his secret.

When I returned to town I went straight to the office. I looked everywhere, but could not find no trace of the telegram.

I rang for Simmons; as he entered I said:

"Simmons, have you seen the telegram that you brought me this morning?"

"Telegram, sir? I never brought you a telegram."

I gazed at him in astonishment.

"Fact, sir," he said. "No telegram came here for you this morning."

I could hardly believe my ears. There was a mistake somewhere. But I gave it up as a bad job and went off to the club. Everybody there was most enthusiastic and congratulatory. After we had settled down in the smoking-room, I told the boys the whole story.

They were rather incredulous at first, until Jimmy Berner burst out: "I tell you what it is, Goody, old chap, it's a clear case of telepathy."

"But I had the telegram," I said.

"You fancied you did," was his reply; "that's part of the business. You were thinking of Dixey. Dixey was thinking of you. Dixey thought he would send you a wire. You thought you received it. That's all."

And that is the true story of how I received my "telepathic tip."—Liverpool (Eng.) Mercury.

Curling the Hair.

Curling is a process which should be undertaken most carefully. Heating with irons should be avoided as much as possible. When using them give yourself plenty of time. The hasty use of overheated irons is the cause of many short, fuzzy-looking fringes one sees. The best plan for curling the hair is to put it into curling pins over night, as the constant use of irons causes the hair to wither and snap.

It is not desirable to use curling fluids, but as it sometimes is very difficult to keep the hair in curl, especially in summer, when the forehead is apt to get damp with perspiration, it may be useful to know of the following simple preparation: Mix ten or twelve grains of carbonate of potash with a pint or more of warm soap and water. Froth the water by brisk agitation. Then dip the brush into this solution and moisten the hair with it before curling at night.

A Bicycle Dance.

An unusual achievement at a bicycle entertainment was recently recorded in one of the suburbs of London. It was dancing on bicycles and was a decided success. A set of lancers was easily and gracefully executed to appropriate music. Eight women took part in the dance, all being dressed in cream colored suits with dark red gloves and shoes, and cream straw sailor hats with red ribbons. The bikes were decorated with red carnations, which matched the shade in the costumes. Waltzing and a Virginia reel followed the lancers.

More Strictly Yet.

Those people who affect horror at the Ontario Marriage Act requiring declarations from both intending bride and groom and the appearance of both of them before the issuer of marriage licenses, will be surprised to learn that in New York State much more stringent regulations are in force. The act provides that "No license for any marriage shall hereafter be issued to which any citizen of a foreign country shall be a party until a Minister or a Consul representing such foreign country in the United States shall certify that the conditions to the validity of the marriage laws of such country shall have been complied with" Then in addition to the license fee to be paid by the applicant, each person solemnizing a marriage must pay to the State a fee of $5 The New York press a few days ago related the amusing story of an official new to the business who accepted $2 as his fee and was obliged to contribute the balance of the $5 claimed by the State out of his own pocket.

MATRIMONIAL

SCOTT—HARMER.

A very pretty wedding occurred on Monday evening last at the residence of the bride's cousin, Mr. Massey, 77 Colborne street, Kingston, when Mr. Fred S. Scott, son of M. W. Scott, was united in marriage to Miss Ruth Harmer, daughter of James Harmer, both of Napanee. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Macgillvary, and the bride looked very charming in a costume of white silk trimmed with deep lace. The wedding presents were numerour and we join with their many friends in wishing them all happiness in their venture upon the sea of matrimony.

Next Wednesday.

The Brockville Recorder, Oct. 6th, says of the Monkey theatre, which exhibits at the Brisco Opera house, on Wednesday afternoon and evening, Oct. 14th: All the good things said and written in advance of Somerby's Monkey theatre were amply borne out at the first appearance in Brockville last night of that noted attraction. The performance was given at the opera house and despite counter attractions was witnessed by more than an average sized audience. Previous to the curtain going up Prof. Wormwood briefly addressed the audience regarding the treatment and training of dumb animals, asserting that the fundamental principle of success was kindness. Five minutes a day, he said, devoted to the training of a dog, would soon place the animal in the same condition as those under his charge. Of the performance itself it is unnecessary to speak other than to say that it was not only wonderful, but decidedly pleasing. The monkeys were all appropriately costumed and exhibited remarkable intelligence and docility. There was an avalanche of fun from start to finish, the "Monks" appearing as acrobats, dancers, actors, bicyclists, tight rope walkers, etc., in a way which seemed to indicate their delight in the performance. There are also a large number of dogs, including pug terriers, Newfoundlands, greyhounds, skyes, etc., and these too attempted and accomplished many difficult feats. Two rare animals, a badger and an anteater, were likewise introduced. Taken as a whole the performance is one which should be seen by young and old, as nothing like has ever before been attempted, much less accomplished. A pleasing feature between acts was the appearance of Prof. Wells, a musical marvel, who, in the garb of a tramp, introduced some novel instruments. His performance on the saxaphone was particularly creditable.

A letter received by Mrs. M. A. Melbourne, Napanee, from her brother in Tokato, N. Dakota, states that a recent hail storm, the worst for many years, had totally destroyed all the crops with the exception of the potatoes; thousands of acres of growing grain had been literally driven into the ground, the hail being in many instances as large as goose eggs, smashing windows and even the shingles and clap boards on the roofs of the houses.

Boring for Oil.

All is bustle and excitement in and about Fredericksburgh, occasioned by the fact that a test well is to be put down on the farm of I. H Schell, with a view to the discovery of gas or oil. In order to begin aright it will be necessary to give a short review of the case. It is now about a year since Mr. Schell, in digging a well beside his house, struck a strong salt and mineral vein at a depth of 12 feet or thereabouts. At this time bubbles were noticed coming up through the water in the drill hole, which, on further examination, proved to be gas. It came in such volume that when burning it was so hot men could not work, and when not burning it was almost at fling and thus work ceased. It was burning continuously for a period of two weeks, when a rise of water prevented a steady flow. One day, out of curiosity, a pot of potatoes were boiled perfectly in a few minutes at the bottom of the well by the burning gas. Mr. Schell began communicating with parties skilled in such matters with a view to taking up and investigating it. He has secured the assistance of those who now purpose thoroughly testing the matter. Experts examined the premises, and as a result B. C. Steele, representing American capitalists, prospecting for oil near Verona, has become sufficiently interested to take the matter in hand and assume the direction of affairs in connection therewith The gas and petroleum right is now controlled by the company through lease on a large quantity of land in the vicinity. Already a portion of the material used at High Falls, near Verona, has been taken up and removed here. Saturday afternoon a large seven ton boiler arrived on the ground. A large building to enclose the necessary machinery will at once be erected near the site of the well previously mentioned. The building will be necessarily large, being divided off into a series of rooms adjoining each other as required for a boiler room, engine room, belt room and drilling room. In all about ninety feet in length and varying in width as the different compartments require. Perhaps a better idea may be gained from the fact that it is estimated that 17,000 feet of material will be required in its construction. The derrick will be seventy-two feet high, drilling a well eight inches in diameter. The workmen are busily engaged on the work, which will be pushed energetically. It is intended to put a double gang of drillers for night and day to expedite the work, which will be prosecuted with due diligence, and we trust will ultimately reward its projectors handsomely for the enterprise thus shown —Whig.

went to her assistance. She was taken to Mr. Gordanier's, where she resides during week days, in an unconscious state, and Drs. Ward, Meacham, and Maybee were soon in attendance. It is supposed she fell from her wheel in a fainting fit. Her nose bled copiously which led some to suppose she had received a severe cut in the face, which is not the case. From the time of the accident until Thursday morning Miss Neilson was in an unconscious state. A partial recovery was then noticeable.

Best Game of the Season.

A game of baseball was scheduled to have been played on Saturday afternoon last between the Printers, of Napanee, and the Sentinels, of Sillsville and surrounding villages, but the latter failed to put in an appearance, much to the disappointment of the Printers and the large crowd of ladies and gentlemen present. However, an interesting game was played between two picked teams, viz: the Ins and Outs, composed of Cricketers, Printers and some boys from the town. Without any exception it was the best game of ball played here this season, and it plainly showed that the practice the boys have had lately has gone far to make them more perfect in the art. The game was not called until after 3 o'clock, the Ins going first to bat. Sheffel was the first to face Pitcher Armstrong, and he lined the ball out for one base, stole second and came home on Root's three-bagger, being the only one to cross the plate before the side was retired. The Outs then went to bat and their efforts were rewarded by three runs. The second innings was about the same except the score being reversed, Ins 3 runs, Outs 1 run, Ham making an elegant hit to centre field, getting two bases and bringing in two runs. The third innings was opened with Root at bat, making a hit to centre field, followed by Gates who knocked the sphere over right field, making two bases. Vanalstine followed on with a cracker-jack drive over center fielder's head, scoring Root and Gates, the side being retired for two runs. The Outs in the second half scored three runs, making the score 7 to 6 in their favor The fourth was opened with Sheffel at bat, who again hit safely for one base. Root making another three bagger, scoring Sheffel and Livesley, and scoring on Gates' sacrifice, and the side was retired for 3 runs. The last half resulted in a white-wash for the Outs, leaving the score 9 to 7 in favor of the Ins. In the fifth innings the umpire took part in the game, and some decisions were given that used to rule the game when our grandfathers played ball, much to the chagrin of the Ins. Still as it was only a friendly game for fun, the kicking did not last very long on the several occasions, as the umpire ruled the game in each and every instance in his genial way that every one finally gave way to him. The latter part of the game was a series of whitewashes for the Ins, the side being retired for the following after the fourth innings: 2 0 0 1 0, and the Outs scoring 3 2 7 2 x, winning the game by a score of 21 to 12. Following is the score:

NOTES.

Livesley played his usual fine game on first, as also did Daly.

Rev. W. W. Peck is a very enthusiastic baseball player and always plays a careful and steady game.

Three-baggers were made by Coates and Root, and two-baggers by Daly, Vanalstine, Ham, Peck and Livesley.

Bain, Gates, Vanalstine, Trimble and Ham gathered in some nice long fly catches and put up a good game in general.

Trimble did the twirling for the Ins and put up an excellent game, striking out 11. Hayes did the pitching for the Outs, and it took a quick eye to connect with his curves (?)

Some of the boys are trying to get on a game with Newburgh to wind up the season with, as the weather is getting rather cold for baseball. If arrangements can be made for a game at an early date, a team will be chosen from the best players in town, and an excellent game may be looked forward too, as Newburgh has a reputation already and Napanee has the material to build one.

When Glasses

Ought to be used and those in use abandoned: First—When we are obliged to remove small objects to a considerable distance from the eye in order to see them distinctly. Second—If we find it necessary to get more light than formerly, as, for instance, to place the light between the eye and the object. Third—If looking at and considering a near object it becomes confused and appears to have a kind of mist before it. Fourth—When the letters of a book run one into the other and hence appear double. Fifth—If the eyes are so fatigued by a little exercise that we are obliged to shut them from time to time and relieve them by looking at different objects. Sixth—If troubled a great deal with headache. The above can be scientifically attended to by A. F. Chinneck, graduate optician, at F. Chinneck's Jewelry Store.

OBITUARY.

MARIA SCALES

Deceased was born in the year 1816 at Berwick-on-Tweed, on the English side of this noted burg, and was a daughter of Major McDonald, of the English army. He sold his commission and came to Canada about 1830, and located at first in Toronto, afterwards on the now-called Porte farm between Napanee and Deseronto. Mrs. Scales was married in Toronto to her late husband, Thomas Scales, by the late Archdeacon Strachan, about the year 1836. She had several children, of whom only one lived to maturity—the late Mrs. Jno. T. Grange. There is a brother of Mrs. Scales living at Ox Point and a sister named Mrs. Mack, whose husband is dead, residing at Mount Pleasant, Iowa. Mr. Thomas Scales died about the year 1854. Since the marriage of her daughter Mrs. Scales has resided with her son-in-law Mr. Jno. T. Grange, at whose house she passed peacefully away on Saturday evening last. The funeral services were conducted at the house and the Church of S. Mary Magdalene, by the Rev. Arthur Jarvis. The deceased had a good memory to the last, and was fond of telling of old times and recounting old experiences, and in the eighty years of an active life, a good many things worth retelling had happened. On her eightieth birthday Mrs. Scales attended confectionery business lately carried on by W. H. Davis, solicits a continuance of the patronage bestowed upon his predecessor, and assures the public that everything will be first class, Oysters arriving daily. Fine stock of cream rolls and meat pies on Saturday.

Fatal Accident.

While a couple of boys were playing on the railway track at the Napanee station, one of them was run over and killed by a freight train from the west, about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. From what we can learn the deceased, named Johnny O'Rourke, aged about 13 years, was trying to jump from the freight when his foot caught and losing his balance he fell between the cars, and the train ran over him cutting him in two.

Jerusalem.

A very interesting lecture on Jerusalem, ancient and modern, was delivered in the basement of the church of S. Mary Magdalene, on Wednesday evening last, by Mr. Jacob Khadder, a native of Jerusalem, and a student of King's college, Nova Scotia. Everyone present was delighted with the lecture and pleased with the illustrations. A number of townspeople were arrayed in costumes provided by the lecturer, to represent some of the prominent characters which were described. Mr. Khadder sang several songs in Arabic, and accompanied himself on the violin. Following is a list of the characters presented:

A Very Pretty Wedding.

There was quite a flutter of excitement at the Methodist parsonage last Wednesday morning, when Mr Geo. E. Deroche, a popular young barrister of Deseronto, was united in marriage to Miss Bertha Eveline McCulloch, eldest daughter of the Rev. R. McCulloch of Newburgh. Mr. G E. Deroche is a nephew of H. M. Deroche, Q. C., ex M. P. P., head of the well known law firm of "Deroche & Madden," Napanee. George was called to the bar a year ago last September and is rapidly rising to a front place in his profession. The bride was attired in a beautiful white silk dress, and was very much admired by all. The ceremony was performed by the bride's father, who also gave away the bride. H. W. Gundy, of Toronto, and Miss Ella McCulloch ably performed the duties of groomsman and bridesmaid. The company was a very select one, and the wedding breakfast was everything that could be desired. Very congratulatory addresses were made by H. M. Deroche, J. H. Madden, H. W. Gundy and Revs. J. M. Whyte and R. McCulloch. The happy couple took the 10 o'clock train at Napanee for Boston, then they intend to take an ocean voyage to Baltimore, Md., thence to Philadelphia and New York. They will be gone between two and three weeks. The happy couple drove away from Newburgh amid showers of rice and good wishes. The following sent very useful and some of them very costly presents: Mrs. P. Deroche, Mr. and Mrs. J. Shorey, Misses E. and C. Shorey, Mrs. Benn, Mrs. Schriver, Miss P. Burdette, Miss H. Burdette, Miss E. Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Courtney, Mrs. and Miss Lott, E. G. Madden, all of Newburgh; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Madden, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Deroche and Miss Deroche, Mr. W. P. Deroche, Napanee; Rev. Geo. and Mr. McCulloch, Richmond Hill; Mr. and Mrs. D. McCulloch, Enfield; Mr. and Mrs. James McCulloch, Prince Albert; Miss Gertie Hawkins, Welland; Prof. and Mrs. John Burwash, of Victoria University; Dr. J. T. Gilmore, warden of the Central prison, Toronto; Rev. R. and Mrs. McCulloch, the groom and Mrs. T. G. Pile, Deseronto; Ella McCulloch, E. A. and R. J. P. McCulloch, Newburgh; Mrs. Deroche, the Misses Deroche and Master Ned Deroche, Kingston; G. B. Henwood, B.A., Miss Henwood, B.A., and W. H. and Mrs. Parsons, Port Hope; Mrs. J. Swanzy and W. Many people go to the city or town dye-house when they have goods to be dyed.

This means a loss of time and much unnecessary expense. Ninety-nine out of every one hundred women can do their own dyeing at home with Diamond Dyes, at an expense of ten or twenty cents for what the professional will charge them $1.50 to $2.00 Home dyeing means a saving of time and much annoyance, as the professional dyer often puts the work aside for a week or ten days.

All difficulties are avoided by using Diamond Dyes in your home. The plain directions for each color make good results absolutely certain. There is a standing guarantee that Diamond Dyes will color more goods, package for package, than any other dyes in the world, and will always give the best and strongest colors.

AN AUTUMN TIFF.

Down the sunny garden pathway
Wandered winsome Madge and I;
She had given her maiden wrath way—
I was dumb and shy.

All undreaming, her I'd slighted,
Wounded her, and piqued her pride;
Now I walked, a wight benighted,
Doleful by her side.

Discord direful raged between us;
(Stupid man and foolish maid!)
So I raised a prayer to Venus
For her urgent aid.

Presto—as I lifted eyes there
Where the slender tendrils clung,
Purple as the twilight skies, there
Grapes in clusters hung.

Plucking, held I some between us,
"Concord!" soft to her I said:
While I breathed a vow to Venus,
She bent low her head.

In the word my heart's designing,
Was not very far to seek;
Soon I saw a sweet flush shining
On her brow and cheek.

Then impulsively she caught 'em—
All else from my mind escapes!
Now we ever have in Autumn
Lots of Concord grapes!

She Thanked Him.

In a Powell-street car the other day a well-known clerk in a San Francisco bank gave up his seat to an elderly lady, who said:

"I am very much obliged to you, sir—you are extremely kind."

"Don't mention it," said he.

"But," said she, "it was really very good of you, and I thank you very much."

"It is nothing, my dear madam," he replied.

"But," said the lady, "do not attempt to put aside my thanks. Your act is so unusual, young sir, that it is my duty to acknowledge a courtesy so sincere."

"But," said the clerk, somewhat annoyed, "it is nothing. Never mind, madam."

"But I do mind," said the lady. "We are living in a time when people who should show the lesser courtesies of life frequently fail to do so."

"But—" said the hapless man.

"Do not interrupt me," said she. "Age nowadays is little habituated to receive from young people the courtesies to which it is entitled. Besides the marked courtesy which you have shown me in giving up your seat so promptly shows at once that wou must have been brought up with the utmost care."

The embarrassed bank clerk by this time was scarlet.

"Yes," said the old lady, continuing, "and your mother should be proud of you. Ah, a mother's love and the benefits of the higher education are easily apparent. I do wish to reciprocate your courtesy by fulsome acknowledgments, but it is sufficient merely to look at you to know that you are a gentleman by birth and breeding. I appeal to anybody in the car."

The passengers giggled in chorus, while the unfortunate bank clerk fled. —San Francisco Argonaut.

A Recognition of Bank.

Some one in the village store had asked the drummer, who was making his first visit in that section, what his political sentiments were.

"When I'm on the road," he answered slowly, "I'm just a plain American. I don't tie myself up to any organization in private life, either. When I cast a vote it goes to the man whom

BINSON CO.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

"Yours truly," hereinafter mentioned, struck Bruce County about the first of the present month—a very opportune time for "taking in" figuratively speaking, the township fall fairs, as you will observe. One thing that struck "your obedient servant" very forcibly was that the aforesaid fairs could be very well abolished, not only here but throughout Ontario, without detriment to agriculture and but at a small pecuniary loss to the hotels and taverns in the villages and hamlets in which they are held. The annual county show is all right and serves a worthy purpose. Such shows are deserving of encouragement and the people of Ontario should be public spirited enough to spare no effort to make them thoroughly representative of the counties in which they are held. The annual township show, however, which under the fostering care of the Ontario Government, has spread till its name is legion, serves only to detract from the influence, interest and usefulness of the county show. The township show has outlived its usefulness, (like the curl in the prize porker's tail its value was ever hard to determine) and it could be well relegated to oblivion, away up salt Salt Creek, and the government grant, upon which its existence depends, placed in a fund for the extermination of Canadian thistles and cockle, which, like the poor, we have always with us.

Bruce County has long been recognized as one of the banner wheat raising counties of Ontario—a doubtful distinction in these days of low prices, small profits and slow returns. The farmers here, however, accepted the Hon. George Foster's advice, some few years before the financial giant of the Conservatives imparted it to a confiding and expectant public, and embarked in mixed farming. They have been getting along fairly well since, although a large number of them are still partial to fall wheat, as it lightens the burden of spring work. The farmers here had a hard time of it last winter. The hay crop was a failure and straw was short. As a result hay was at a premium and pressed straw of the rankest and blackest description brought $10 and $12 a ton. They evidently profited by the lesson as one can perceive by the large amount of cattle corn that has been grown in this district (Bruce and Kincardine townships) this season.

But to return to the fairs. One thing noticeable is the decrease in the number of heavy draft horses. Like Ichabod, the glory of the C'ydesda e has departed and the blood and roadster now receives the attention that, but a few short years ago, was the Clyde's due. The Percheron is still in evidence, but not so popular as of yore. The Montreal Witness recently asked the question: "Is the horse doomed?" As to that we cannot say, but that he is frequently d—— by the farmer, with a stable full of heavy eating but unsaleable equines, is a fact not to be gainsaid.

I attended the fall show at Port Elgin, which was duly "opened" by his honor the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. This interesting cere mony reminded me of the commencement exercises at a college. It was a two day show, his honor arrived on the afternoon of the second day and opened the fair just as the

I consider most likely to do business for the nation in a businesslike way. But my general platform is that this is the best country mentioned in the geography, and that we have produced some of the greatest men on earth."

"That's right," exclaimed an enthusiastic auditor. "An' ter them remarks I'd like ter add thet when it comes ter perducin' great men, this here town o' Higginsville don't take no back seat ten none of 'em."

"Of course you have some very estimable citizens," said the drummer in a tone of surprise, "but I had reference to men whose greatness has been recognized by the world."

"That's the kind of great men I mean, too. We've got one of 'em right here."

"Of course I'm not very well acquainted with the people of the place; not nearly as well acquainted as I hope to become."

"That accounts, mebbe, fur yer not knowin' Si Daggett."

"I must confess that I never made his acquaintance."

THE RED PLANET MARS.

Mr. Percival Lowell on the Canals That Water Its Oases.

One great difficulty that has always stood in the way of the acceptance of the theory that the canals are really artificial in origin arises from their great dimensions. Nearly all of them are several hundred, and some of them thousands of miles in length, while they vary in width from thirty to fifty or sixty miles. This difficulty vanishes, however, if we accept Mr. Lowell's interpretation of the canals. According to him they are not really canals, but lines of irrigation. Canals no doubt exist there, but they are too small to be separately visible. So the round spots at their junctions, some of which previous observers had detected, are, in Mr. Lowell's opinion, not lakes of water, but irrigated oases, the broad red-ochre expanses in the midst of which they appear, and which the canals intersect in every direction, being dry land in the most emphatic sense—in other words, deserts.

This statement gives the clew to Mr. Lowell's theory of Mars. His observations, and those of his assistants, have convinced him that the only considerable body of water on Mars is the dark blue band surrounding the polar cap. That cap, he thinks, as others have done, represents the winter accumulation of snow and contains, locked up by frost, practically all the water on the planet. As the polar snow begins to melt with the approach of spring, a circular sea forms around its edge. This sea gradually drains off, and its waters are lost in the dusky areas toward the equator. These areas are not entirely desert, like the broad red-ochre region, but contain the germs and roots of vegetation, which quickens with the annual access of water from the melting polar snows, and so the dusky expanses visibly darken in hue. Then the canals begin to make their appearance, first in the neighborhood of the dark areas. They are due, Mr. Lowell thinks, to the leading off of the water through channels of irrigation traversing the deserts, and the consequent growth of vegetation upon long narrow belts. There is not enough water to irrigate the desert continents as a whole, and so the inhabitants do the best they can by freshening certain belts and spots once every Martian year. Soon after the polar snows have completely disappeared and the polar sea has been entirely drained off, the areas of vegetation begin to fade, and the canals and oases vanish, to make their appearance again when the proper season returns.

Remembering the sequence of observed phenomena on Mars as described above, it will be seen that this theory accounts very well for what is seen. At any rate, it is the most complete theory that has yet been advanced.

In regard to the suppositious inhabitants themselves, dwelling upon a half-dried-up world, and compelled to husband its small remaining store of water with such infinite pains, Mr. Lowell has nothing to offer. He accepts the opinions, previously advanced by others, that the people of Mars may be of gigantic stature, on account of the small force of gravity there, and therefore capable of greater physical feats than we can perform, and that their world being further along in its geographical history than ours is, they also may have attained a more advanced state of civilization and culture than yet exists among the people of the earth.—Harper's Weekly.

An Old Family Society.

The Buchanan society, as the name denotes, is composed of individuals of the name and clan of Buchanan, and is the oldest named society in Scotland. It was instituted in Glasgow so far back as 1725. At a friendly meeting of some of the name of Buchanan held there on March 5 of that year, the following proposal was made:

"That the name of Buchanan, being now the most numerous name in the place, and many poor boys of that name, who are found to be of good genius, being lost, for want of good education, a fund might be begun and carried on by the name, the interest of which in time might enable some of them to be useful in church and state."

This society has since gone on with almost uninterrupted success. It has attained a position of high importance and is of great practical use.—Notes and Queries.

Manufacture of Condensed Milk.

Condensed milk, which is so much used for the food of infants, is prepared by slowly evaporating the water of milk by moderate heat. There are two varieties, the plain, which is condensed to about one-fourth of its bulk and superheated, and to which no sugar is added, and the stronger variety, which is more condensed and to which suger cane is added in excess, holding about 45 per cent. of sugar among its solid ingredients. This excess of sugar prevents the decomposition of the milk, which will keep fresh for many hours after the can has been opened.

A Weary Search.

The story in the Editor's Drawer for March of the professor of mathematics who dreamed that his son was under the radical sign and he could not get him out, reminds a reader of an experience related by a Boston drawing teacher. She had been studying perspective one evening until bedtime, and during the night her sister, who roomed with her, heard her groping about the room and opening and closing bureau drawers.

"What are you hunting for, Mary?" inquired the sister.

"Oh, dear!" moaned the somnambulist, "I can't find the vanishing point!"—From the "Editor's Drawer" in Harpers Magazine for October.

Took Chances on the Soap.

Lady (to dirty tramp)—"Here's a piece of soap, and I hope you will wash yourself with it, and here's a piece of home-made cake to eat."

Dirty Tramp (critically surveying the soap and cake)—"Is the soap home-made, too, mum?"

Lady—"Of course not."

Dirty Tramp—"Then, if you don't mind, mum, I'd rather eat the soap and scrub meself with the cake."—Fun.

She Got a Seat.

"Of course, I don't expect to get a seat," said the large lady, who was hanging to the strap. "And I don't think I ought to have one, neither. It ain't no more than right when a man has spent the last nickel he's got for a ride to make him stand up; indeed it ain't."

Seven men arose, each jingling some silver in his pocket, as if to resent the imputation.—Indianapolis Journal.

arrived on the afternoon of the second day and opened the fair just as the performance was about to close. He was escorted to an elevated platform by a brass band, where a number of addresses, remarkable only for their length, were yelled at him by several influential gentlemen of the village and district. The addresses were highly complimentary to his honor, the village and district aforesaid, and bore a touching reference to the loyalty of the people to our Gracious Queen, of whom his honor was a worthy representative, and the grand British institutions under which they moved, breathed and held their fair. During this trying ordeal his honor stood with features composed and head bared, unmindful of the cooling breezes from Lake Huron, which trailed through his locks with unblushing familiarity. There he stood with the spirit of a martyr and the dignity befitting a representative of a Sovereign, on whose domains the sun never sets, fortified with the knowledge that all things come to him who waits. His turn did arrive at last. To the tuneful accompaniment of a wheezy hurdy-gurdy of an adjacent merry-go-round, which was rendering a badly mutilated edition of Maggie Murphy's Home, his honor, the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario commenced his speech, which was to open and likewise close the show, hurdy-gurdy and all. Of the speech I will say nothing further than that it was good as such speeches go.

It does seem to me, that like the township fair, the services of our Lieutenant-Governor could be very well dispensed with. I don't wish to to speak disparagingly of the present incumbent. He is a very worthy man and no doubt deserving of the distinction accorded him. He performs the duties of his position in a creditable manner and as a fair opener he is a glorious success. But when one perceives the struggle that the masses of Canada are enduring for very existence it begins to strike one as high time some of the frills with which our system of Government is embellished were lopped off. Our system of Government is badly in need of abbreviating, and as the position of Lieutenant-Governor seems to us a purely honorary one, let us begin with it.

A Traveler's Tale.

The tall man with the literary stoop in his shoulders then broke the silence.

"The average native of Porto Rico," he began, "is so large that he will fill a good sized hogshead."

A loud protest went up from the loungers in front of the post-office. The tall man cleared his throat again.

"I ought to add," he said, in a softened tone, "that he will fill the hogshead with dark-brown molasses."

Whereupon the hour for dinner having arrived the house adjourned until 2 p.m., without ceremony.—New York World.

NEURASTHENIA.

Weakened Nerves and Nervous Diseases are Cutting Off Thousands

Paine's Celery Compound Makes Nervous People Well and Strong.

Health is the first and most important thing in this life of ours. Health is a blessing far beyond our computation; it is vastly more important than wealth or great social distinction.

One of the most dreaded troubles of the present day is nervousness. It is generally acknowledged that nervous diseases are growing alarmingly prevalent in our midst.

The causes that lead to Neurasthenia, or weakness of the nerves, are many. Business cares, feverish haste after riches, social and household worries, sexual and alcoholic excesses, all contribute to the breaking down and physical ruin of thousands of men and women.

In words of truth and soberness we set before the sick and afflicted the claims of Paine's Celery Compound as a quick relief and certain cure for all forms of nervous diseases. It is a perfect restorer of nerve force and power to the weakened and debilitated system. Prominent men and women, all over the country, have renewed their lives and kept their places in business and in society by using Paine's Celery Compound. In all large cities, where nervous diseases are most frequently seen, the best physicians prescribe Paine's Celery Compound with immense success.

The following letter from Mrs. Alfred Perry, Port Maitland, N.S., proves that Paine's Celery Compound has no equal for the cure of nervous diseases in whatever form they may present themselves:

"For two years my system was all run down, and I suffered more than I can describe from nervous prostration and insomnia; at times I almost lost my reason from severe pain at base of the brain. My husband advised me to try Paine's Celery Compound, which I did, and the effects were wonderful. I soon began to sleep well, the pain left my head, my whole system was strengthened, and I am now enjoying very good health."

"I would cheerfully recommend Paine's Celery Compound to any one suffering from like troubles. You have my best wishes for the future success of your excellent remedy."

THE Spectator, published in London, England, a Liberal-Unionist weekly, supports Lord Aberdeen in refusing to sign those orders-in-council. It says: We do not doubt that Lord Aberdeen acted quite rightly. It is one of the chief duties of a colonial governor, as of a constitutional sovereign, to hold an equal balance between the two parties in the state, and to refuse to allow an outgoing ministry which has been condemned by the popular voice to embarrass their successors by appointments which, though technically not illegal, are against the spirit of the constitution. A governor is a trustee, and must act as one.

Richard KNOWS more about tariff framing than any other member of the Government. He may consent at a later stage to waste the hours of declining life in the comfortable dalliance of the High Commissioner's Chambers, Victoria Street, London, S.W., but it is doubtful if this is done until the new tariff is safely launched."

SHE TURNED UP AGAIN.

A Raft Had Proved to Be a Poor Conveyance For an Elopement.

"I rode up to a cabin in Knox county, Ky.," said John William a traveling man, "and as I approached the man of the house inquired:

"'Stranger, did yo' see a red-headed gal with a yaller sunbonnet comin' from town.'

"'No.'

"'I reckon she'll be hyar termorrer.'

"'Expectin' company?'

"'No; jes my darter. She'd been down ter Frankfort. She tuk it in her head ter git married, an' run off with a no-'count feller, Tim Hadley. They stole a raft o' mine an' floated down the Kaintuck ter Frankfort.'

"'Did you stop them?'

"'No; mail gits ter Frankfort quicker'n a raft, so I writ ter Jim Wakefield down thar ter buy th' logs, put Tim in jail fer stealin' th' raft, an' send th' money back hyer with Sal. I reckon she missed the stage.'

"At that moment a girl turned the corner of the road, and the old man said:

"'Waal, sal, yo got back?"

"'Yaas, dad.'

"'Tim in jail?'

"'Yaas, dad.'

"'Bring back th' money fer th' logs?'

"'Yaas, dad.'

"'Waal, go in an' cook supper, an' nex' time yo git married run off with a man who has more gumption than ter try ter git away on a raft.'

"'Yaas, dad', and the girl went to the kitchen as though she had never left it."—Washington Star.

Making It Plain.

The young woman from Boston was at the table in a railroad restaurant in the far west and when she essayed to cut the steak with which she had been served, she discovered that what she needed was a higher education in athletics. After four or five ineffectual attempts to dissect it she called to the waiter:

"Can't you," she asked, "give me a bit of steak which is characterized by less tenacity of tissue"

The waiter staggered and a cowboy across the table looked up.

"I didn't quite ketch, mum," said the waiter, bending forward with his hand to his ear.

"I said," and there was a shade of annoyance in her tone, "that I desired a portion of steak in which the coherence of the molecules was not so apparent."

"Oh," stammered the waiter, and he stood fixed with his mouth open in amazement.

The young woman became embarrassed.

"Here," snorted the gallant cowboy, coming to the rescue, with a sounding whack on the table, "git a move on you; what the lady wants is a piece of meat that ain't so tough, she can't tick her purty teeth into it, see!" and the young woman actually smiled as the waiter hurried away.—Detroit Free Press.

WHY HER BACK ACHES

THIS IS NO PATENT MEDICINE ADV., SO READ TO THE END.

One of the Ills Incident to the Ordinary Housekeeper's Life — Fortunately a Symptom Only, Not a Disease—Heed Nature's Warning in Time.

What causes bachache? Whence the unkind fate that selects this particular spot for pain, soreness and stiffness? In a general way it may be said to be due to overstrain and congestion, whether brought about by position, excess of work or an overtaxing of the mind and of the emotions.

Worry makes some backs ache, excessive mental work may have the same result; too long a time in the upright standing position wears out others; and definite disease like gout, rheumatism, tubercular conditions and spinal cord lesions, will also cause pain in the back that varies from a dull ache to genuine torture.

This will suggest the remedy. Backache is but a symptom, not a disease. It is often the outward expression of an inward and hidden congestion or of an active inflammation that needs prompt treatment. The spinal nerves may be the seat of various forms of neuralgia that do not cure themselves and which call for active medical aid.

First, as regard posture. Everyone knows that standing is peculiarly injurious to women. The fact is common property; yet quite erroneous ideas prevail concerning the reason of this disability. The real cause is this: A woman's knee is not constructed in such a way as to form a good part of a supporting column. Mechanically it is imperfect for this particular purpose. Experience has proved that women are not made for standing.

Position, though not everything, is important in securing freedom from backache. To stand correctly, the head should be well back, the chin in, and shoulder and hips should be in a straight line. With ill-fitting shoes that do not allow the proper position of the foot, it is impossible to stand thus correctly, and much irritating spnal discomfort is the result.

In these days no sensible woman laces. The warning note to-day is transferred from the corset to the heavy skirt—that abomination of awkwardness and disaster.

The constant dragging at the small of the back, the flopping of stiff material about the feet and ankles, the heavy weight insufficiently supported, make a combination of evils that the most graceful and robust women find it difficult to overcome. Seven or ten pounds of skirt may be said, like the Mormon's seventeen wives, to be too much.

Backache is a prominet symptom of neurasthenia, or nervous exhaustion, of hysteria and of spinal irritation. These are conditions in which there is exhaustion or irritation of the nerve centres, together with alteration in the quality or quantity of the blood.

FROM among a number of freehand sketches as he chooses to call them by "Puck" in the last issue of "The Week," we cull the following anent Sir Richard Cartwright: "He was born and aristocrat and bred a gentleman. He is not a person easily described. He is a man of education. He has opinions — well-defined opinions— on most current topics. He has a mind well cultivated and a presence never to be forgotten. It would be unusual for a person to have Sir Richard pointed out to him to-day and not recognize him to-morrow. In points he is the exact antipodes to Mr. Laurier. Mr. Laurier's weak points are his strength; Sir Richard's strong points are his weakness. He has as already said, clear and positive opinions on most subjects, and a heaven-born gift of uttering them. No person in Canada can speak with such inexorable clearness, such killing pertinence. We have heard laudations upon the merit of calling a spade a spade, but Sir Richard not only calls a spade a spade but he is quite likely to hold up the spade with galling malignity, and make his opponent feel that the air is dense with spades which are likely to strike in any direction. Sir Richard has the dangerous gift of humor. No doubt he has the kindly article which makes us laugh, and even when the point is turned against us, we join in the fun and feel our own wits brightened. But this is strictly reserved for home and friends. For his opponents Sir Richard's humour is barbed. From his bow fly poisoned arrows, and most of them hit the mark. It is not individuals alone who are wounded by these barbed messengers which are sent in hosts to find their victims, but very often great interests. Hence enmities, hence bitterness. History is made by breaking down abuses, and smashing the ugly head of privilege. It is right and patriotic and manly to do it. But if these words reach the eye of some ambitious youth who thinks that high office is the greatest thing in the world, then let me whisper gently in his ear, "Don't do anything great, my friend. Don't hurl your sturdy javelins at injustice and fraud and usurpation. Drift sweetly along. Let other enthusiasts deal the blows and get the abuse, and do you with amiable smile make your peace with averages and mediocrities. Then, indeed, covered with the serene mantle of Opportunism may you hope, to become Premier! Sir Richard Cartwright is the ablest financier in Canada and best fitted for the position of Finance Minister, and would be Finance Minister if it had not been deemed wise by the Liberal leaders on the eve of the election to throw a sop to the tariff pets, combinesters and monopolists. Word was passed round that if Laurier wins Sir Richard will be set aside, and therefore you will be safe from his sledge-hammer blows. When the Government was formed, some effect had to be given to this implied compact. Hence Mr. Fielding became Minister of Finance, and Sir Richard was consigned to what, under ordinary circumstances, would be the purely ornamental post of Trade and Commerce. It would be strange, almost ironical, if Sir Richard should still prove to be the commanding force in the tariff policy of the new Government. Let the combinesters have a care. Knowledge is power, and Sir

The Motherly Landlady.

A friend of mine changed his boarding place last week, going to one of those houses that advertise home comforts and a motherly landlady, which generally means that she is a person who will pry into one's private affairs and read long letters left lying about. This particular landlady happens to regard drinking and smoking as particular devices of the evil one, so when my friend began to praise a new brand of tobacco at the dinner table the other night she saw her chance, and promptly chipped into the conversation.

"Smoking makes men utterly selfish," she said, as a starter, enunciating her words as if she were sawing ice into symmetrical blocks.

My friend was dazed for a moment, for he had not much experience with people who denounce everything as wrong which they do not personally fancy, but he quickly recovered and answered: "Possibly so, but after all, it's a standoff, for abstinence from smoking seems to make people deucedly impolite; or, possibly, you indulge a little? So many of the ladies enjoy their cigarettes nowadays."

Then the storm broke.—Boston Post.

Her Great Sacrifice.

"Papa!"

The ennobling impress of high resolve was visible upon the young girl's brow.

"Papa, to help you pay your mortgage I have decided to make the most complete sacrifice a devoted daughter can make."

"My child," replied the distracted parent, "surely you do not mean that—"

"Yes, papa, I will."

A look of intense determination appeared on her face, and her countenance lighted up with filial affection, as she added:

"Yes, papa, I will sell my bicycle."

A Little Girl's Riddle.

Several children were asking riddles the other day, and a bright little girl who listened, got the idea of what a riddle was. The next day she went to her father and said: "There was a blind and curtains on a pole and the pole fell and two men laughed." The father promptly gave it up, when she said: "Don't you see the point?" Upon being answered in the negative she puzzled her brains for awhile, and said: "Neither do I." She is now practicing on riddles that have some meaning in them.

Tired, Aching Feet.

Those who are troubled with tired, aching feet will find great relief by bathing them at night in hot water, then annointing them with vaseline, which should be rubbed in until they have become dry. Painful points occur next in frequency in the middle of the back and in the lumbar region. Sometimes the entire surface is sensitive, and even the clothes themselves are a source of pain and discomfort.

Bending the body, standing, going up stairs, lifting, holding the arms in any cramped position, etc., increases the pain and sensations of weakness, causing sharp shooting pains to radiate over the body elsewhere. Cold or heat applied to the surface of the back also causes sharp pain through these tender points.

When mental excitability is a marked feature of nervous exhaustion, the pain is also more intense. In this depressed form it is a prominent symptom as well, though not so acute and severe.

In this form of neurasthenia it increases after fatigue and exertion, after extensive movements of the vertebral column and after exposure and overwork. There is a general feeling of oppression, breathlessness, palpitation of the heart and a sense of constriction about the head.

It is impossible to stand for any length of time without leaning against something or bending one of the knees. What is more complained of is weakness in performing the various movements necessary to daily life and the rapid exhaustion that is so discouraging.

Neuralgia of the spinal nerves produces backache. This particular form of neuralgia may be due to the poison of gout, rheumatism, malaria, etc. What is known as muscular rheumatism is also a cause. Acute or chronic kidney troubles give pain in the back, and so also does disease of other organs in the abdomen or pelvis.

As the causes of this distressing condition, backache, differ widely, it naturally follows that the various remedies to relieve it are by no means the same in character. Strain induced by posture demands change of position. Let those who stand many hours each day sit whenever possible, and lie at full length on a couch or on the floor whenever occasion permits. Walking is also a relief. Heavy skirts must be discarded, together with all imperfect shoes, badly fitting corsets and waists made too stiff with whalebone.

The so-called "spinal diseases," tubercular bone troubles, require the attention of a careful physician. Whatever the treatment, cod liver oil and an abundance of fresh air will be two of the things prescribed. Pain in the back due to states of nervous exhaustion require tonic, remedies such as arsenic, nux vomica, iron, cod liver oil, rest, exercise and cold baths.

Sometimes quick sponging, alternately with hot and cold water, is of great benefit. The pains of exhaustion and irritability require a sojourn in the mountains whenever possible. This is a hint for vacations. A long sea voyage is also beneficial, and sometimes in a warm, soft southern climate pains of every description will disappear, backache included.—New York World.

A Self-Evident Culinary Fact.

If hot meats and soups are covered before they are perfectly cool they will surely spoil; the hot air must have a place to escape, or the meat will be affected.

To Remove Grass Stains.

If grass stains in white goods are rubbed with alcohol, before articles are put into soap and water, the stains may be readily removed.

THE FARM ORCHARD.

SOME EXCELLENT HINTS FOR PLANTING FROM KANSAS.

The General Idea May be Followed, But the Varieties Should be Chosen For the Locality as Demonstrated by Successful Growers.

One of the first things to consider in "opening" a farm or founding a home is the establishment of an orchard, says Farm and Home; not merely tree planting for sake of covering space, regardless of kind and quality, but the selection and setting out of such varieties as will be of value for eating, cooking, marketing and keeping. The plan of orchard, as reproduced here, has been in operation several years in northern Kansas and while the varieties of fruit are especially adapted to that region, many of them may safely be set as far north as southern Ontario, southern Nebraska and Iowa, northern Missouri and a considerable part of Illinois and most if not all answer for a wide strip extending farther north. The orchard fronts to the south, is 320 feet square with a space 100 by 160 feet reserved for house, lawn, garden and small fruits. The outbuildings are located to the northeast and are not shown in the diagram. The plan explains where the apples, pears, plums, cherries and peaches are located, and when filled properly will be just what the home needs and can heartily appreciate.

The orchard in the diagram contains 113 apple trees, viz., 68 winter, 27 autumn and 18 summer. Of winter varieand then Grimes Golden, Little Romanite, Jonathan, Newton Pippin, Rawles Genet, White Winter Pearmain, Winesap, Yellow Belleflower, Smith's Cider, American Golden Russet and Roman Stem. Of autumn varieties, beginning at east side, plant first row Bailey Sweet, next Cooper's Early, Rambo, Lowell, Maiden's Blush and Hewes Crab. Of summer varieties, beginning with outside row, plant Summer Rambo, Early Harvest, Oldenburg and Red Astrachan. The apple trees being 40 feet apart admits of a good peach orchard, which matures and bears much fruit long before the apples trees cause the necessity of their removal. For peaches begin on the east side and plant in first row Alexander, next Crawford's Late, and then in order, Crawford's Early, George the Fourth, Royal Kensington, Hale's Early, Heath's Cling, Large Early York, Lemon Cling, Old Mixon, Free, Chinese Cling, Smock, Old Mixon Cling, Stump of the World, Troth's Early, Ward's Late and Indian Blood Cling. The bear trees, by the mistake of the engraver, are shown 20 feet apart; they should be 10 feet. There would thus be five rows, each containing five trees. Judiciously mulch them. Plant first row to Bartlett, then Flemish Beauty, Howell, Seckel and Vicar of Wakefield.

The plums are clustered instead of in rows, and consist of an equal number of Wild Goose, Imperial Gage, Damson and Lombard. The diagram shows three rows, 20 feet apart, for cherries. The distance is all right, but there should be five trees to the row. Several rows of small fruits are planted between the cherry rows, also in other parts of the orchard, where convenient. Of cherries, a row each of Morello, Early Richmond and Governor Wood. The crabapples consist of two each of Transcendants, Hyslop and Whitney, and occupy space between garden and house. Apricots, two each of Large Early, Peach and Hemskirk, and planted near garden, with a half-dozen Orange quipees in vicinity of summer house, west of vegetable and flower garden.

Of blackberries plant twelve each of Wilson's Early, Snyder, Kittanning and Lawton, and set out between pear trees and plum grove. Of raspberries set between the cherry rows, twelve each of Turner, Gregg, Cuthbert, McCormick and Souhegan; while of gooseberries plant between plum grove and cherry trees, twelve bushes each of Houghton, Pale Red and Whitesmith. Plant currants in same space as gooseberries, only to the north and a half-dozen each of Red Dutch, Versaillaise and White Grape. The strawberry bed occupies space in the northwest part of the reserved ground west of the pathway leading to orchard, and contains equal numbers of the Wilson, Crescent, Charles Downing, Miner and Sharpless. Grapes fill spaces on each edge of al lside and rear pathways and consit of 20 Concord, 10 Worden, 10 Delaware, 10 Clinton and 10 Niagara.

The Chestnut.

The chestnut is a native of America and grows upon the thinnest and dryest soils. It does not do well upon limestone soils nor on wet land. Though the tree sometimes thrives in localities where it is not a native, it is best to study well the soil and climate before attempting its culture. The tree grows naturally from the seed, and also reproduces itself abundantly from the sprouts at the base of the trunk when the trees are cut in the forest. The nuts lose their vitality in a very short time, so that care must be taken to sow them at once, or to keep them so their vitality may not be impaired. If onces allowed to dry the nuts will not grow. Keep them in moist sawdust till needed for planting, and if possible plant the seed where the tree is to grow, as the loss of the taproot is a greater check to the chestnut than any other tree.—Denver Field and Farm.

An Economist of Nature.

A traveller passing through Kansas a short while ago stopped at a settler's cabin, near the western part of the state line. The owner, a tall, lank farmer, with a stub of a beard and sharp blue eyes, slowly hoisted his booted legs off a rail fence and slouched up to the stranger,

"How yer be, stranger? Goin' fer ter stop long in these parts?"

"Oh, no—only a very short time."

"That's lucky fer you, stranger, 'cause there's goin' ter be a little blow here shortly, and it mightn't be safe fer ye to be round. I've just been er-fixin' up the chicks over yonder."

"Why, what funny looking chickens! Somebody plucked half their feathers off!"

"Somebody? Say, stranger, be yer jokin'? 'Cause it's safer fer ye if I knows what yer mean. Them air plucked chicks is what the last blow did."

"What! a cyclone plucked half the feathers out?"

"Yep, that's it; and, stranger, I've got 'em tied to that fence er-waitin' fer the next blow, which is due here purty nigh bout now. Yer see, when it comes it will take the other half off and save pluckin'. There's lots ter do hereabouts, stranger, 'sides pluckin' chicks."—From the "Editor's Drawer" in Harper's Magazine for October.

A Correction.

The amateur political reformer was talking with a ward politician, who had been sent to the Legislature the year before, and was anxious to get in again, under the auspices of the amateur reformers. The politician professed the highest regard for reform in every way, and also pointed out how hard it would be for the amateurs to get any other capable man to stand as a candidate for them.

"Honest men is scarce," remarked the politician, "but I'd run fer yez, an' pull the votes of the byes i nthe district."

"Yes," assented the reformer, "honest men are scarce, and yet I have heard it said that every man has his price."

"Don't you believe it," returned the would-be candidate, heartily. "I know that when I was at the capitol every man didn't have his price. Why, dere was lots of times we had to compromise for fifty cents on the dollar."—From the "Editor's Drawer" in Harper's Magazine for October.

THE POULTRY YARD.

Some of the Difficulties a Novice Finds in Choosing a Breed.

A difficult problem for the amateur to solve is choosing a breed of poultry. It has been estimated that there are about one hundred distinct breeds of fowls. This would appear quite a large field from which to make a selection, and yet it will pay best to make a judicious choice at the start. Each variety has its champions who have settled this question to their own satisfaction years ago and each will of course, uphold srongly the merits of his particular body.

The veteran breeder, Mr. James Rankin of South Easton, Mass., once told me that he had been actively engaged in the poultry business for over 50 years and had in this time experimented with nearly all the prominent breeds of fowls, and finally, some years ago, had settled on the Light Brahmas and Pekin Ducks. With both of these he has been very successful, especially with the latter. First, let us consider what branch of the business we wish to follow. To one who attends the leading shows the temptation to breed for prize-winners is every strong. The display of such superior specimens calls forth unusual admiration and enthusiasm as each particular breed is seen in the pink of condition and with the most attractive surroundings. If he enters the show and comes first to the Bantams, he will probably be carried away with their great variety and the wonderful beauty of their plumage and general appearance. As he proceeds, he may come next to the Hamburgs, which rival almost all the other breeds in markings and effectiveness. Again, he stops at the Polish and Houdans. Here the variety seems endless, and with their peculiar attractive head-feathering he is lost in new admiration. Next, he comes to the Leghorns, Minorcas, Andalusians, Black Spanish and Dorkings. The variety of solid colors is something new this time, and with their brilliant large combs and wattles and graceful tails, he seems to have forgotten his previous enthusiasm, and is carried away in a new direction. Crossing to another aisle, he comes to a class comprising the almost endless variety of Games. These, with their several years, and concludes: "1. By painting the plum knots with kerosene during the summer and removing from the trees and burning early in winter, before the winter spores are scattered, the disease can be held in check. 2. By combining the above treatment with proper spraying, the disease can be in a large measure prevented and practically eradicated from orchards that have suffered from a severe attack."

The Use of Sulphur.

Sulphur is sometimes recommended as useful for inducing fowls to lay. A little of it occasionally may prove beneficial, but too much will cause a lameness which is commonly called rheumatism, especially if the yards and houses are damp. The trouble is the anxiety to get a large yield of eggs often leads the owner to feed his flocks as much in a day as ought to be given in a week. It should be treated as a medicine rather than as a food, and given with caution. A small amount of sulphur is needed by animals, but this is for the most part Poultry Feeding Rack.

For the bottom I take a board 1 inch thick, 6 inches wide and 6 feet long, ends 1 inch thick, 6 inches wide and 18 feet long. Nail solid to ends of bottom; their ends flush with underside of bottom. Two strips 1-2 inch thick and 4 inches wide are nailed to the edges of the bottom, thus making a trough 3 inches deep with ends 18 inches high. I then take strips 1-4-inch thick, 3 inches wide and 18 inches long, pointed at upper end, and nail them to the sides of the trough, leaving a space between pickets of 1 12 inches for chicks or 2 inches for fowls. This gives a complete and durable feed rack, where the weak have equal chance with the strong, and no waste of feed. I begin to feed in the rack when chicks are about six weeks old. All wet feed is given in the racks. I always feed fowls and chicks separately.—Farm and Home.

How to Cure Black Knot.

A remedy for black knot in the cherry, plum, etc., is to cut off the most seriously affected branches below the diseased part. Shave the other knots off smoothly with the surface of the limb, then paint all the scars with any kind of cheap paint that does not contain lead, into which is mixed a spoonful of paris green to a pound of paint. This method has proved effective among Connecticut Shakers, who are very capable fruit growers. Many others recommend painting the wound with raw linseed oil without any mixture of the poison. Probably the better plan is to entirely cut off every affected branch at a good distance below the black knot, painting the wound with one of the preparations just named.

Be careful not to have any sap or juice on the knife from near the black knot when you cut off the limb, as this might inoculate the healthy sap with germs of black knot. The Massachusetts Experiment Station has given much attention to this pest for

W. C. McCOMBER & SON, Bouchette, Que., report in a letter that Pyny-Pectoral cured Mrs. C. Garceau of chronic cold in chest and bronchial tubes, and also cured W. G. McComber of a long-standing cold.

MR. J. H. HUTTY, Chemist, 528 Yonge St., Toronto, writes: "As a general cough and lung syrup Pyny-Pectoral is a most invaluable preparation. It has given the utmost satisfaction to all who have tried it, many having spoken to me of the benefits derived from its use in their families. It is suitable for old or young, being pleasant to the taste. Its sale with me has been wonderful, and I can always recommend it as a safe and reliable cough medicine."

THE ONTARIO MODEL.

THE SHOW AT THE GUELPH AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Experiments Worth Millions to Farmers and Highly Valued by Them—Keeping in Touch With the Agriculturists—Co-operative Testing.

The fall session of the Ontario Agricultural College always opens at the Model Farm, Guelph, on October 1. It will be interesting, therefore, to take a walk around the college and farm grounds in company with Prof. C. A. Zavitz, experimentalist; Prof. H. H. Dean of the dairy department, and Mr. Wm. Rennie, farm superintendent, and see the home of the labors of coming students and learn something about it and its capabilities. The college grounds and farm are situated on the brow of a hill on the Dundas road, immediately at Guelph's city limits. It is easy of access by the Guelph Electric Railway, the terminus of which is at the entrance to the grounds. As one enters the main gateway a magnificent scene presents itself to the eye. Directly in front of the stately college building and several lecture halls spreads a well-kept lawn, 20 acres in extent, studded with artistically designed flower beds, ornamental trees, etc., leaving ample evidence of the master hand of the landscape gardener.

The college proper faces the head of the main drive, and includes, besides the residence of the president, class rooms, a museum, reading room, library and students' dormitories. Next to this is a handsome new building in course of erection for the use of the chemical department, and which, it is expected, will be opened at the beginning of the fall session, thus replacing the former one destroyed by fire. Near by are also convocation hall, the experimental building, the residences of the bursar, farm superintendent and experimentalist, botanical laboratory and greenhouse. At the rear are the outbuildings, barns, stables and carpenters' shops. Each of the departments named is equipped with the most modern and approved appliances.

JAMES MILLS, M.A., LL.D.

The farm embraces 550 acres in all, of which about 330 immediately surrounds the main college building, the balance being on the westerly side of the Dundas road, on which are the dairy and poultry buildings.

The crops this year, on the whole, fully up to the average. Eighty-five acres yielded about 200 tons of hay, this being exceptionally heavy. On 76 acres oats were grown, but the ravages of the army worm devastated quite half the crop. Twenty acres were devoted to Mandscheuri barley, which turned out a very heavy crop. The two varieties of winter wheat this year in the larger fields were Dawson's Golden chaff and the early Genesee giant, each of which yielded some 35 bushels per acre. Twenty acres of Prussian blue peas, producing 80 loads, have not yet been threshed.

The experimental fields occupy about 50 acres at the rear of the main college building on a gradual slope to the southwest. These grounds are divided into upwards of 2000 plots, which are devoted to the testing of different va-and Great Divide potatoes have given good satisfaction.

Hartley's bronze top turnip and the improved short white carrot stand high in the tests made.

Great stress is laid upon the fact that in selecting even the very best varieties of seeds, those which are plump and well-developed give far greater satisfaction than seed which is smaller and shrunken.

In addition to the 2000 experiments made at the farm, great interest is being taken in this work outside, inasmuch as 2260 farmers throughout Ontario are carrying on experiments in connection with the college work at this time. Already this year there have been received over 1000 applications for winter wheat seed for experimental purposes, being nearly double the number of last year. Every spring a circular is issued, giving the experiments which are to be conducted during the following season and which practically cover all kinds of farm crops. A copy of this circular may be had on application to the experimentalist, from whom all information can be obtained.

In the horticultural department extensive experiments are continuously being made. Among the most important this season was that made with 160 varieties of strawberries. The results of this experiment will be looked forward to with a great deal of interest in the next two or three years.

The whole work of the institution from an experimental standpoint is of a very practical nature, and is proving of great value to every farmer, fruit grower, dairyman and live stock breeder, signifying as it does not only a matter of great interest but of dollars and cents as well.

The newest department of the college is that of bacteriology, wherein a careful study is made of the germs of disease in animals and the various forms and conditions of bacteria playing so important a part in the ripening of cream and the development of cheese.

The dairy department is a model of perfection. The building in which the animals are housed is about 120 feet in length, fitted up with two milking machines, and has accommodation for 30 head. Everything in connecton with the stable is scrupulously clean. At the present time there are 25 cows in full milk, their average daily yield being about 300 pounds. In the flush of the season, when the pasturage is at its best, one or two of the cows give enough milk to produce as much as 2 1-2 pounds of butter each per day. The herd is made up of Jerseys, Holsteins, Ayrshires and grades. One Holstein during the past year yielded 10,000 pounds of milk, producing over 400 pounds of butter.

An immense circular silo is attached to the building and which, when full, holds 250 tons of ensilage. This silo is now being filled, the machine used being the Smalley, which is cutting at the rate of 70 tons per day.

Situate to the east of the silo are the dairy school and home dairy buildings, completely fitted with all modern appliances. Lectures are delivered during the session to the male and female students, and practical lessons given in butter and cheese making. The record of each cow's yield and quality of milk is kept, and thereby the most profitable breed of animals is ascertained. In the experimental department of the dairy it was shown from equal quantities of rich and ordinary milk that the former produced a cheese weighing 71 pounds, whereas one made from the latter weighed only 53 3-4 pounds. Interesting experiments are carried on in this department which cannot fail to prove of great value to dairymen throughout the land.

In the poultry department there are at present some 400 birds, representing every choice variety, each breed having a separate house and run.

A FOUR-YEAR-OLD.

A four-year-old's a baby,
Whatever you do or say,
You may rig him out in a roundabout
And teach him the time of day;
As his muscles grow he will bluster and blow,
Till you think him an army of men;
Until short of breath you may "love" him to death"
And declare "he's his father again,"
But, whether you will, he's a baby still,
Whatever you do or say.

A four-year-old's a baby,
Whatever you do or say,
He may run and shout and want to play out
In the yard the livelong day;
He may put on his hat and his coat and all that,
And button his shoes with a hook;
He may swagger and strut and pretend to be, but
No matter how big he may look
He's a baby still, whether you will,
Whatever you do or say.

A four-year-old's a baby,
You may call him a man, as a mather can,
Seventy times a day;
If he cries when he's hurt, all covered with dirt,
You'll gather him up in your arms,
Nor kisses refuse to cover the bruise
And quiet his tearful alarms,
For whether you will, he's a baby still,
Whatever you do or say.

HOW SHE FOOLED HIM

The momentous interivew between Mrs. Jefferson Wayland and Mr. Hopkins was over at last—and the lady was heartily glad that it was so. All her smiles and suavity were needed—all her slender stock of patience was exhausted.

"Of all intolerable creatures, I do think an old bachelor is the most intolerable," thought Mrs. Wayland to herself, looking at Mr. Hopkins with the sweetest and most interested of expressions. "I wonder if he really means to stay here all day—and I have an engagement at two!"

But Mr. Hopkins had risen to his feet at last, with an "ahem," and a manifest intention of going and Mrs. Wayland rose, too, with a soft rustle of silken robes and expensive laces.

"Then you think, madam, that circumstances are tolerably auspicious as regards the consummation of my matrimonial happiness within a very brief period of time?" was Mr. Hopkins' final query.

"My dear sir, I am quite sure of it," answered Mrs. Wayland emphatically, as she followed Noah Hopkins, Esquire, to her front door.

Noah was a tall, portly gentleman, something on the shady side of 50, with massive gold eye-glasses, and scanty hair, brushed carefuly to hide the bald spot on the crown of his respectable head—a gentleman who pronounced his words slowly and sententiously and somehow seemed to carry in his very presence the auriferous idea of bank stock, railroad bonds and productive coupons!

"Yes, but, madam, Miss Wayland is so very—ahem!—so remarkably undemonstrative—I might even say so decidedly cold in her manner—"

"Oh, my dear sir," smoothly interupted Mrs. Wayland, "that is the way with all girls at this interesting period of their lives. Nothing on earth but maidenly shyness — natural girlish timidity, I assure you!"

Mr. Hopkins looked gratified, but still doubtful.

"You are quite certain, then, that she really loves me?"

"There cannot possibly be a doubt of it, Mr. Hopkins!"

And Noah Hopkins departed, treading gleefully over the ringing pavements as his thoughts reverted ever and anon to the pretty 18-year-old damsel who was, cupid willing, so soon to become Mrs. Hopkins.

But what did Bessey Wayland herself think of it? And how did she contemplate the near approach of orange blossoms and wedding ring?

She sat there by the window, as her mother returned from bidding a ceremonious adieu to Mr. Hopkins, a modern edition of Niobe, "all in tears."

She was small and fragile, with shady blue eyes, rather large and languishing; light brown hair that had an irresistible inclination to curl all over her head in tiny gold-burnished rings, and cheeks where changing dimples hid away among the loveliest roses.

"Crying again, my dear?" said Mrs. Wayland in accents of mild reproach out walking to-morrow."

"Very well, mamma."

"And I think you had better wear your blue silk with the double satin folds. Never mind about putting on your new earrings and pin. Mr. Hopkins has some rather peculiar ideas, and might consider them a little extravagant for people in our circumstances."

"Yes, mamma," said Bessie, as docile as a four-year-old child.

She was all ready, looking exceedingly lovely in the blue silk dress, when Mr. Noah Hopkins called for her, according to the program, next morning.

"What a lucky fellow I am," thought Noah, exultaptly, as he drew the little gloved hand within his arm, with a sensation of propritorship very agreeable to experience.

"Do stop a minute, Mr. Hopkins," said Bessie, as they reached the glittering splendors of a jeweler's window, "I just want to look at those pretty things! Aren't those rubies perfectly splendid. You're going to buy me a set of emeralds and diamonds, aren't you, when we are married? And a real Geneva watch with a bouquet of brilliants on the case? And a pair of those lovely link bracelets? I never had much jewelry, but when I'm married, I mean to buy everything that is pretty. And you'll get me a parure of big white pearls, won't you?"

"I—I'll think of it," stammered Mr. Hopkins, rather taken aback by the extent of his bride-elect's expectations.

"It will be so nice to have a rich husband," went on Bessie, artlessly. "Mamma says you'll let me have a carriage and a pair of darling little cream-colored ponies, that I can drive myself, with silver-mounted harness, and—"

"Y-yes, but you don't consider, my dear—horses are shockingly expensive," interrupted Noah, wiping his brow with a huge yellow silk pocket handkerchief.

"What of that? You're rich, aren't you? I shall have a housekeeper, and two maids, and a colored waiter, and white kid gloves—"

"Kid gloves are two dollars a pair, my dear," apologetically put in Mr. Hopkins.

devoted to the testing of different varieties of farm crops, to date of seeding, to methods of cultivation, to the selection of seed, the application of fertilizers, etc. The varieties which give the most satisfactory results on the experimental ground are those used in the larger fields, and the seed thus obtained from the large fields is sold at moderate prices to farmers throughout Ontario in order to enable them to secure pure seed of the very best kinds. Besides the crops grown on the farm, a considerable area is devoted to pasturage purposes.

In regard to the variety tests, it might be mentioned that the leading kinds of nearly all sorts of farm crops are not only obtained from over the Dominion, but also from about twenty foreign countries possessing a climate similar to Ontario, from which some excellent sorts have been obtained.

Among some that may be named to the advantage of the Ontario farmers are Dawson's Golden Chaff, the Early Red Clawson, and the Early Genesee Giant, as having given very good results. In oats, the Siberian from Russia, the Joanette from France, the Oderbrucker from Germany, and the Banner of Ontario are prominent varieties, especially the Siberian, which has given excellent results in the Guelph trial grounds, and also occupied first place in the co-operative work conducted in Ontario during each of the last four years. In barleys the Mandscheuri has given the largest average yield per acre out of some 40 varieties grown for seven successive years. This is a six-rowed barley, has a stiff straw and a grain which weighs upwards of fifty pounds per measured bushel. Its importation has proved a valuable addition to the barleys of this Province, having occupied first place in the yield per acre throughout Ontario in the last four years. It is now becoming a very popular variety among farmers generally.

In spring wheat of all the varieties tested, the Herison bearded has given a very satisfactory result, the average for the past seven years having been upwards of twenty-nine bushels per acre, and the wheat, per measured bushel, a little over sixty-three pounds.

In the corn tested, the mammoth Cuban and the Wisconsin earliest white Dent were very satisfactory.

say on the above subject. Comfortable quarters he placed as the first requisite, and we give the description and illustration of his barn basement. He says:

We keep the temperature of our stable at 30 to 35 degrees, and never below 30 degrees in the most severe weather. I find the cows eat and do better when not too warm. We use a single stanchion with chain tie. The stanchion is simply a pole about three inches through, mortised into a sill and securely fastened at the top. The chain tie goes around the neck with a large ring that slides easily up and down the stanchion. This gives the cow much more comfort and keeps her just as clean.

We put the first stanchion 18 inches from the wall or partition, and then one every three feet. We then put a partition between every other cow. The partition should fit tight in the manger, and should not come back between the cows more than 18 inches from the stanchion. We have a drop behind the cows of six inches. The floor on which the cows stand is five feet from manger to drop. The manger is 18 inches wide. We left an eight-inch space under the feed rack to feed grain through.

This stable has many advantages, and I think would be appreciated by all. Water is as necessary as the feed in the production of winter milk, and it is hard for the average farmer to supply his cows with plenty of it, of the right temperature. A cow cannot do her best if compelled to stand in a zero wind and drink through the ice. I would water in the stable, if possible. We have a drive well in the feed alley. The temperature of the water from this well is never below 50 degrees, but I would like to supply them with good water 10 or 15 degrees warmer.

Good care is what tells in the long run. Milk, feed and water regularly, and be sure not to leave them out when too cold. We only leave ours out long enough to arrange the stable when the temperature is below 20 degrees.

"THE BRYAN BATTLE CRY."

Among the numerous election songs now prevalent in the United States, is the one given below which seems to have the call for popularity with the western followers of "The Boy Orator":

No crown of thorns you shall behold
On labor's brow; no cross of gold
For those who dig and delve and mold,
Like slaves to heartless masters sold.

Lo, how it shines, the precious gem
Set in the queen's grand diadem!
No wonder that it bright appears,
When made of labor's sweat and tears.

In mansions made of marble dwell
The wealthy and the proud, but tell
Who made the wealth turned thus to spoils
If not the crowd that bleeds and toils.

The glowing gold sure is produced
By brain and brawn together fused
In toil's retort, and then, escaped
From it, into the dollar shaped.

Some pride themselves of learning, but
Forget the source, forget the hut,
Forget that toil its fruits transmutes
In making men of thoughtless brutes.

Then tell me why dead matter may
The living soul of labor sway,
And tell me, too, ye mighty, why
Ye honest labor crucify?

Why should the brow the sweat of which
Has crowned with gold the idle rich,
Itself be made, while joy it mourns,
To wear a crown of stinging thorns?

Enlisted in the sacred cause
Of labor's right and juster laws,
We by the stars and stripes now swear
That no such crown our brows shall wear.

And, by the name we holy hold,
We swear we'll melt that cross of gold
In righteous wrath, now kindled by
The ringing Bryan battle cry.

Wheat is thought to be the cereal oldest in cultivation.

Wayland, in accents of mild reproach, "Really, Bessie, your conduct is most insecutable."

"Mamma!" sobbed Bessie, flashing rebellion from the brimming blue orbs, "I hate Mr. Hopkins!"

"My dearest child!" exclaimed the horrified mother, "don't let me ever hear you say such a shockingly unladylike thing again! When he is so condescending as to notice a child like you!"

"Yes, but, mamma—"

"I quite understand the meaning of this new freak of obstinacy," went on Mrs. Wayland, sternly. "You have seen Charley Evans again."

"I couldn't help it, mamma," faltered Bessie; "he was at the door just as I came out of church last night, and when I—"

"The idea!" ejaculated Mrs. Wayland, holding up both her hands and looking appealingly at the ceiling, as if for inspiration. "And you can actually stoop to fancy a clerk in Mr. Hopkins' banking establishment!"

"But I don't 'fancy' him, mamma," returned Bessie, stoutly; "I love him with my whole heart."

"Hush—sh—h!" exclaimed Mrs. Wayland, authoritatively. "You will be married a month from to-morrow to Mr. Hopkins, Charley Evans to the contrary, notwithstanding. And now let us sit down and make out a complete list of the dresses and things you will want."

"I don't care for dresses," pouted Bessie; but Mrs. Wayland paid no attention to her remonstrance and opened her tablets, putting the pencil thoughtfully to her lips.

"You see, we must be very careful at first, for Mr. Hopkins is so exceedingly economical—it won't do to shock his ideas of what is proper and fitting."

Bessie winked away the tears and listened—nay, she almost smiled as her mother wrote down item after item. Mrs. Wayland could have hugged herself for her diplomacy.

"The girl never yet lived who could resist the attraction of new clothes and an outfit of dresses," she thought. "I knew how to bring the wilful little minx to reason!"

"Bessie," she said, as she finally closed the little set of tablets and restored the pencil to its place within them, "Mr. Hopkins is coming to take you a rich husband! We shall go to Saratoga, or the White mountains, for at least two months every year, of course. I always did sigh for a gay life and plenty of excitement."

"Sixty dollars a week for eight weeks—four hundred and eighty dollars!" mentally computed Noah, with a slight shiver. "I shall come to the poorhouse, as sure as I'm a living sinner!"

"And as many dresses as I want," pursued Bessie, clapping her little hands. "Mrs. Glenn has 32 silks, and I don't know how many nuns' veiling and taffetas. Oh, Noah, how glad I am that you are rich!"

Noah Hopkins stared confusedly down at the blue eyes that were upturned to his so unconsciously.

"You'll have a billiard table, of course? I dote on billiards—and a yacht, for I'm so fond of the salt air, and sea bathing, and —"

"I'll have a private insane asylum and put myself in it first!" ejaculated Noah, driven to the very borders of distraction. "Miss Wayland, I must have entirely misunderstood your character, from beginning to end!"

"I shouldn't at all wonder if you had," said Bessie, demurely.

"I certainly never for an instant contemplated such frightful extravagance as you seem to coolly take for granted."

"If I marry a rich husband I certainly mean to use his money and enjoy it," said Bessie, defiantly.

"Then, ma'am, allow me to remark that you will not use mine! I—I prefer remaining single!"

"And what's to become of me, with all my wedding clothes ordered?" whimpered Bessie, trying very hard to summon the semblance of mortified tears into her mischievous blue eyes.

"Perhaps you might prefer some younger man?" suggested Noah, with the lively horror of a breach of promise suit rising up before his mind's eye. "I understand that my clerk, Mr. Evans, is—"

Bessie's cheeks glowed like carmine.

"Mr. Evan's situation does not justify him in marrying—he is too poor. I'm afraid you'll have to take me yourself."

Noah involuntarily recoiled from the idea of pony carriages, cream-colored horses and yachts.

"Yes, but—but our head clerkship is vacant, at a salary of $2000 a year. I did intend it for old Bogsley, but Charley Evans is a very deserving young fellow, and—"

Here Miss Bessie interrupted him by standing on her tiptoes to give him a kiss that almost shook his resolutions of celibacy. But he remembered the colored waiter, with the white kid gloves, and stood firm!

"But what will mamma say?" suddenly questioned Bessie.

"I will make it all right with her, my dear," said Mr. Noah Hopkins, thinking of the gorgeous India shawl full of palm leaves and pagodas, wherewith he would propitiate the impending anger of his mother-in-law that was not to be.

"It'll cost a deuce of a sum," thought Noah, sorrowfully, "but it won't compare with the daily and hourly drain of an extravagant wife. I'm well out of this scrape, shawl or no shawl!"

So our little Bessie went triumphantly home, to work at her wedding garments with renewed zeal, sewing a happy thought in with every stitch, and Charley Evans was that very day agreably surprised with a $2000 position formally presented to him with a little stiff speech by Noah Hopkins, Esq.

"Poor Evans," thought Noah, as Charley left him after a torrent of thanks, "that extravagant little puss will be the ruin of him before he is a year older, but it's no business of mine."

Nevertheless, Mr. Evans would persist in rushing blindly upon his fate, and married Bessie Wayland on the very day originally set for the consummation of Noah's own nuptials. Mr. Hopkins went to the wedding, and muttered thoughtfully to himself as the bridal party passed beneath the arched doorway of the church:

"Good Apollo! what an escape I have had!"

But Mr. and Mrs. Evans were quite contented with the existing state of things.—N. Y. Weekly.

The musical artist in the garb of a tramp was also amusing, his clever playing on the unique instruments being wonderful. The Monkey Theatre is

R. and Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Co., Kingston Mr. Hanley was a brother of Mr. J. P. Hanley, station agent at Napanee, a distant relative of Mr. Thos. Hanley, of Belleville, and Mr. J. C. Hanley, of Tyendinaga. Mr. Hanley was a trusted employe of the G. T. R., and a highly respected citizen of the Limestone City. The funeral, which took place on Sunday afternoon, was one of the largest that has been seen in Kingston in years, and St. Mary's cathedral was crowded to the doors. The remains were interred in St. Mary's cemetery.

Something Like Popularity.

It is little to be wondered at that there is such a tremendous demand for the FAMILY HERALD AND WEEKLY STAR of Montreal. So great is the rush that in August and September the publishers had to refuse to accept new subscribers, their splendid printing equipment being already taxed to its utmost to catch the mails. We hear the publishers have now got their lightning web presses speeded up and their mailing appliances improved, so they can accept a limited number of new subscribers. Those who have been permitted a private view of the season's premium. "The Orphan's Prayer," predict that the demand for the FAMILY HERALD AND WEEKLY STAR this autumn will be enormous. And to think that such a paper is only one dollar a year; coming every week, with one hundred and twenty eight columns of the best reading of the day, and the latest and most reliable news record, is simply a thing that is beyond comprehension.

An Opportunity Not to be Lost.

It is almost too bad to give it away, but really the story is too good to keep. It appears that a popular young gentleman called on an up town young lady one evening recently. When he arrived there was not a cloud in the sky, so he carried no umbrella and wore neither galoshes nor mackintosh. At 10 o'clock, when he arose to go, it was raining hard. "My, my, my!" said the nice young lady, "If you go out in all this storm you will catch your death of cold!" "I'm afraid I might!" was the trembling answer. "Well I'll tell you what—stay all night; you can sleep with Tom. Excuse me for a minute," and the young lady flew gracefully upstairs to see that Tom's room was in order. In five minutes she came down to announce that everything was ready, but her lover was not in sight. In a very few minutes he appeared, dripping wet and out of breath from running, with a bundle in a newspaper under his arm. "Why, dear, where have you been?" was her greeting. "Been Coffee Drunkards.

Dr. Mendel, of Berlin, says the leading symptoms of coffee drinkers are profound depression of spirits, frequent headaches with insomnia. A strong dose of coffee will relieve, then the ailment returns; the muscles become weak and the hands tremble when at rest. The victims suffer so severely they dare not abandon the drinking of coffee for fear of death. Dr. Mendel had under his constant observation a community of coffee drinkers in and about Essex. Madden Cereal, the new grain coffee, had just the opposite effect and should be used instead of coffee. It is cheaper and can be purchased from any grocer.

Sudden Death.

N. P. Crossley, of King, father of Rev. D. O. Crossley, of the Western Church, and Rev. H. T. Crossley, the evangelist, died at his late residence on Saturday last and was buried on Tuesday, of this week. He had reached the ripe age of 85 years, and up to within two days of his death was in his usual health although somewhat feable. He received a slight stroke of paralysis on Thursday morning and died two days later. His funeral was largely attended from far and near he having been a respected and worthy citizen of the community for over 65 years.

Ought to be used and those in use abandoned: First—When we are obliged to remove small objects to a considerable distance from the eye in order to see them distinctly. Second—If we find it necessary to get more light than formerly, as, for instance, to place the light between the eye and the object. Third—If looking at and considering a near object it becomes confused and appears to have a kind of mist before it. Fourth—When the letters of a book run one into the other and hence appear double. Fifth—If the eyes are so fatigued by a little exercise that we are obliged to shut them from time to time and relieve them by looking at different objects. Sixth—If troubled a great deal with headache. The above can be scientifically attended to by A. F. Chinneck, graduate optician, at F. Chinneck's Jewelry Store.

The cutting in half of the ordinary rate for weekly papers by the MONTREAL WEEKLY GAZETTE has been attended by a large increase in circulation, which the publishers expect to see still further expanded during the coming year. It is published by the Gazette Printing Company, Richard White, Managing Director, Montreal, to whom correspondence and orders should be addressed.

A Courageous Lad.

Jack Sparks, the 17-year-old son of Dr. Sparks, Kingston, has accomplished a feat that would do justice to an old timer. On the morning of July 23rd last the young lad left Kingston on his wheel, his object being, not to break records, but to journey leisurely along the country roads as far as Chicago, covering the distance in seven days actual riding time. Not being satisfied to stop in The World's Fair city he started eastward, going down through Indiana and Ohio. At Toledo he stopped for a few days and then Cleveland was reached. Buffalo was the next point of interest and it was while nearing this city that he met with the only mishap that occurred on the whole trip, breaking his handle bar in going down a hill. The accident took place about 50 miles from Buffalo and he was compelled to make that distance by rail, being the only road covered except by wheel. From Buffalo he crossed into Canada, coming home by way of Hamilton. Mr. Sparks says that the roads of Canada are far superior to those of the United States. The distance covered was 2,000 miles, a plucky ride for one so young, and his plucky trip has won the admiration of his many friends.

Opera House.

Lincoln J. Carter's "The Heart of Chicago," said to be an exceptionally strong melodrama will be the next attraction at the Opera House, on Wednesday Oct. 21st. "The Heart of Chicago" is said to be exceptionally well put on and to present some extraordinary stage pictures. As the story of the play opens on the night of the great Chicago Fire, and thus affords a brilliant opportunity for the introduction of a fire the opportunity is not wasted. The corner of State and Madison streets before, during and after the fire is shown. Old timers in Chicago will readily recognize the old landmarks which were reproduced from photographs. The next important scene represents the roof of the Masonic Temple and also shows a panoramic view of the city to the south and west, showing Michigan Ave, State Street and Wabash Avenue as far as Twelfth Street and the cross streets almost to the river. The Roof Garden scene affords opportunity for the introduction of a number of clever specialties. An absolutely new railroad scene is also a feature of the play. The scene is laid near Whiting, Ind., and a train is seen approaching in the distance, its headlight being at first merely a bright speck in the darkness gradually increasing in size as it draws nearer. Just as the heroine of the play adjusts the signal lights of the open bridge the train dashes down to the footlights and comes to a full stop, The interpreting company is said to be the best which has ever been sent to us by Mr. Carter.

A Practice Game.

On Tuesday afternoon a game of football was played in the park between the Collegiate Institute boys and a picked team, the latter kindly consenting to play in order to give the Collegiate team some practice before the approaching matches. It was a good exhibition and the N. C. I. team is stronger this year than ever and we predict that the close of the season will still find the cup in Napanee. At 4 30 the teams lined up as follows:

N. C. I.		TOWN.
Lamey	goal	Coates
Anderson, Exley,	backs	Brown, Bald,
Hawley, Rockwell, Nixon,	half backs	Bradshaw, Haines, Ham,
Grieve, Vanalstine, Trimble, Preston, McCullough,	forwards	Harrison, Bain, Hayes Allen, Stevens,

Shortly after the ball was kicked off Trimble made a sharp shot on goal, which scored. Some good plays then ensued before McCullough succeeded in putting the ball between the sticks off of an elegant corner kick. After some more scrimmaging Preston made a rush on goal and by neat manœuvreing placed a neat one in in goal before half time was called, making the score 3 to 0 in favor of the Collegiate. After a five minutes rest play was again resumed and the town team played a much stronger game but could not compete with the boys from the Institute and before time was called Preston scored twice more and McCullough once, the game ending 6 to 0 in favor of the Institute. The boys on the town team all played well, there being no distinction between them.

NOTES.

Captain Grieve is the "right man in the right place" and we sincerely hope he will be able to bring his team to the front again this fall as he did last year.

Vanalstine, Trimble, Preston, McCullough and Grieve, the forwards, are very strong this year and did elegant work on Tuesday.

Hawley, Rockwell and Nixon, the half backs, were never in better trim than now, and great things are expected of them in the approaching games.

The backs, Anderson and Exley are playing a fine game and will help to keep the trophy again.

Last, but not least, is Geo. Lamey, the goal keeper. If the ball is fortunate enough to get through the lines to him, it will speedily rebound and be found "far away," for Lamey is doing some fine work and with practice will be unapproachable.

The combination work of the forwards on the right wing of the school team was not as good as it might be, and a little time given to that practice would strengthen them considerably.

The season will be opened on Saturday, Oct. 24th, at the park, when Picton High School will play the N. C. I. Every one that can should be there to encourage the boys in their good playing.

A printing office is considered by many persons to be rather a tough place, and a newspaper worker likely to be a bad man. Statistics, however do not bear out that idea," said a police captain to a Philadelphia Bulletin reporter. "In looking over a book containing the records of prisoners, I find that in the state penitentiary of Texas out of 3,890 convicts there is not a single newspaper man or printer. There were, however, ministers, doctors, bankers, barbers, photographers, barkeepers, cooks, and members of all other professions and callings."

An important feature of Harper's Magazine for several months to come will be Poultney Bigelow's series of papers on the "White Man's Africa," treating in the author's original and striking way the new continent recently opened up to European exploitation. The first paper, in the November number, will give a novel view of Jameson's raid from material placed in the author's hand by an English physician and a Boer official — thus presenting both sides of this remarkable episode. The series is the result of a journey to South Africa undertaken by Mr. Bigelow for Harper's Magazine, and is to be illustrated from photographs specially made for the purpose.

Aluminum in Favor.

Aluminum quickly found favor in the kitchen, and its success warranted the manufacture of articles that are now found all over the house. The writing table is fitted up with the light, bright metal. It serves the smoker and the man who shaves; all kinds of toilet articles are made from it—brushes, combs, boxes, opera glasses. Everything that requires lightness, strength and durability to make it serve its purpose better is reproduced in this material. On the dining table may be found gold-aluminum spoons and forks that are said to wear longer than the best plated silver. The gold is not a veneering, but is fused with and gives its color to the white metal. The physician finds it valuable for antiseptic dishes, and the photographer uses it for his plates, on which to develop pictures. The traveler and the cook, however, are the ones who receive the greatest benefit from this always clean metal. The weight of a bag is considerably lessened when all the brushes, boxes and bottles are made of aluminum, and the cook's "temper" is now a thing of the past as she views her pots and pans that are never black and are "as light as a feather." It does not "chip" or crack, and the dough does not stick to it, and all the cleaning it requires is good soapsuds and water.

The small shops that were opened two years ago for the sale of aluminum articles have grown into big shops, and the trade is increasing every day. It is interesting to learn that novelties are being added all the time to their stock. "Now the aluminum articles are being cast entire, there is yet more demand for them," said a dealer. "This lobster inkstand is cast all in one piece," displaying a perfectly shaped, long-clawed crustacean, whose front legs moved in life-like fashion. "There are a few drawbacks, however, in the way of a universal demand for aluminum articles. The price is comparatively high, and there is no way of joining aluminum edges together except by riveting. It will not take soldering, but all that will be changed in time, and it has already made wonderful strides.—New Ideas.

A Petrified Bronco.

H. Clay Emmet, a young cowboy from Belton, Texas, reports a singular find made by him during a cattle hunting round-up in the Panhandle country recently. The find was nothing more or less than a petrified pony, standing erect and complete in all its parts. Emmet says that he and his partner, B. C. Woodville, were riding across the prairie late one afternoon, when their tired ponies neighed and whinned as if they were aware of the presence of another animal. Looking around, they discovered what they thought was a bronco tethered to a mesquite which crowned the summit of a little knoll to the northward, says the Denver Field and Farm.

They rode up to the spot and found that the horse was fastened by a chain, but stood so rigidly and seemed altogether so mysterious that their own horses reared and plunged as if in fright. Finally they dismounted and found that the pony was petrified, not a hair or a hoof amiss. Emmet says that some ranchman years ago must have chained the poor horse there, leaving it to starve upon the plains. As the ribs of the animal were plainly visible in the petrification, and it seemed to have been otherwise much emaciated, this is most probably the case. Emmet will arrange to have the strange find exhibited in some museum. It frequently happens that horses fall into the habit of going to sleep while standing, and it must have been under these circumstances that the Panhandle bronco departed this life to join the great majority.

The grocer was weighing some sugar for the woman in the dyed blue bonnet, when the man in the black frock coat and yellowish white tie, who had been standing in the door for some minutes, came inside and laid a silver quarter on the counter.

"I picked it up on the floor, just at the edge of the steps," he said. "It must belong to you. A quarter or a thousand dollars, sir—it is the principle of the thing that I look at. I want nothing that is not mine. There is the money."

The grocer laid a large forefinger on the quarter and shoved it back across the counter.

"You put dot money in your pocket, mein friend," he said.

The Plaintiff's Powerful Plea.

"I went into a country district in Maryland a few days ago to try a case," said a Washington attorney.

"I appeared for the plaintiff, and it must be confessed that the evidence failed to establish his claim. I presented the matter before the justice of the peace in the best light I knew how, but had very little hope of secured the verdict. My client, when I finished, whispered to me that he would say a few words if I were willing, and, considering the case lost, I consented. It was the most unique speech I ever heard and it won the case. He said:

"'Squire, brought this suit, and the evidence, except my own, is against me. I don't accuse any one of lying, Squire, but the witnesses are the most mistaken lot of fellows I ever saw. You know me, Squire. Two years ago you sold me a horse for sound that was as blind as a bat. I made the trade and stuck to it, and this is the first time I have mentioned it. When you used to buy grain, you stood on the scales when the empty wagon was weighed, but I never said a word. Now, do you think I am the kind of a man to kick up a rumpus and sue a fellow unless he has done me wrong?"

"It took just five minutes for the justice to decide for the plaintiff."—Washington Star.

They Were Ready.

One of the district school trustees was a crank on the subject of fire, and when he called around with the examining board he always confined his remarks to a question addressed to the pupils as to what they would do in case the building should catch fire.

The teacher was acquainted with his hobby, so she prompted her scholars as to the answer they should give when he arsoe to propound his accustomed inquiry.

When the board called, however, this particular trustee, perhaps from a desire to emulate his associates in their addresses, rose and said:

"You boy and girls have paid such nice attention to Mr. Jones' remarks, I wonder what you would do if I were to make you a little speech?"

Quick as thought a hundred voices piped in unison:

"Form in line and march down stairs."—Detroit Free Press.

BLUEBIRD BULLETIN.

RESULTS OF THE BUREAU OF INDUSTRIES' INVESTIGATION.

A Canadian Songster That Seems to Have Disappeared Before the Pugnacious Sparrow and the Severe Winter Weather Description.

"And the birds sang 'round him, o'er him;
'Do not shoot us, Hiawatha!'
Sang the Opechee, the Robin, Sang the Bluebird, the Owaissa."
—LONGFELLOW.

It had been rumored that the Bluebird had departed from his usual haunts in the Province of Ontario. The Ontario Bureau of Industries thereupon sent out three questions to its correspondents, viz.: 1. Were Bluebirds seen in your vicinity last spring (1895)? 2. Have any remained to nest? 3. Are they more or less numerous than in former years? The 1895 annual report then proceeds: In this connection the following description of the bird may be of value:

Bluebird: Sialia sialis.

Length: About six and a half inches.

Male: Sky blue above; breast, reddish brown; belly, white; wings, blue, with dark edging; bill and feet, black.

Female: Duller in color. Young, speckled on breast and back.

Song: A sweet, plaintive warble, as if saying, "Dear, dear, think of it, think of it." Burroughs says it continually calls, "Purity, purity," the accent in each case being the same.

Season: Comes to Ontario in March and April, and remains until late in October.

Breeds: All through its range.

Nest: In natural or artificial holes in trees, stubs or posts, such as knot-holes or abandoned holes of the woodpecker or in bird boxes; usually a mere lining, composed of miscellaneous material loosely put together.

Eggs: Four to six; pale blue, shading sometimes to white; unmarked.

Range: Eastern United States to the eastern range of the Rocky Mountains north to Manitoba, Ontario and Nova Scotia; south in winter from the Middle States to the Gulf States and Cuba, Bermudas, resident.

The Monthly Weather Review of the Dominion Meteorological Service, for April, 1895, reported Bluebirds first observed in April as follows: Thedford, 3d; Princeton; 1st, Georgetown, 5th, Lucknow, 14th; McCowsville, 1st; Banff, 21st; Lakefield, 7th.

In his evidence before the Ontario Agricultural Commission, in 1881, Dr. William Brodie, of Toronto, said of the feeding habits of the Bluebird: "The Bluebird in early spring is a very general feeder. It feeds on grain pretty largely, on the seeds of the wild rose, ants, small bettles, and the larvae of dipteta."

Prof. Saunders, on the same occasion, said: "The Bluebird, I think, feeds altogether on insects, though it may take a few seeds when it cannot get enough insects."

Mr. T. McIlwraith, author of "Bluebirds of Ontario," has the following to say of the Bluebird: "It is now well known that during the past winter a very great reduction has taken place in the number of Bluebirds in all parts of the country which they used to frequent. This has been the result of two evils of starvation, both of which are much to be dreaded, viz., hunger and cold.

"Correspondents writing from the neighborhood of Washington, where these birds used to spend the winter, have told me of finding many dead specimens in the orchards during the CANADA wants peace, prosperity and population. Let the school question rest.

THE man who waits for the office to seek him is, generally speaking, not in the running.

AS McPhadden would say, "That fellow Beattie, of London, is a good guy—he wouldn't let a fellow die of a 'tirst."

IT wouldn't be a bad idea to have the Hon. Geo. E. Foster deliver a temperance lecture to the Conservatives of London.

WE take this opportunity of wishing our readers A Merry Christmas and A Happy New Year. May the era of prosperity which is predicted for Canada find you at home.

ON Saturday Mr. Snitsinger and T. O. Davis, Liberals, were elected in the bye-elections for Cornwall and Saskatchewan respectively, and A. C. Fraser was elected in the bye-election for the Manitoba legislature held in North Brandon. Things are coming our way pretty well. London will be Tremendous Efforts Made to Meet the Rush.

Never before in the history of the Wells & Richardson Co., manufacturers of the celebrated Diamond Dyes, have they been so completely deluged and weighed down with mail matter as at the present time. Thousands of letter orders are crowding in from all parts of the Dominion for the great popular Ten Cent Combination that was advertised a short time ago. The avalanche of letters is so vast that a largely increased staff of hands is necessary to attend to it. The enterprising Diamond Dye firm have been obliged to hold over for a few days some thousands of orders before filling them.

This fact should discourage no one: there will be no disappointments; every order received will be well and truly filled, as steps have been taken to double the daily supply of Photos and Excelsior Rhyming A B C Books, Illustrated.

THE bye-election in Cornwall and Stormont on Saturday resulted in the return of Mr. Snitsinger, the Liberal candidate, by a majority of over 500. At the general election the late Dr. Bergin, Conservative, was elected by a majority of 325. The result of Saturday's election should demonstrate conclusively to the Tupperites that the Catholic laity of Ontario is satisfied with the school settlement. The constituency of Cornwall is largely Catholic and a desperate attempt was made by Mr. Foster, Sir Adolphe Caron and others to revive the school question, but the sober common sense of the electorate would have none of it. The Manitoba school question is dead and buried and any attempt to monkey with the corpse will not be tolerated.

HE WAS UTTERLY DISCOURAGED.

The Fate of One Who Wasn't Willing to Take the World as He Found It.

There was the inflection of habitual melancholy in his voice as he remarked:

"Man is a victim of his own delusions. The hopes of this year are only the disappointments of the next."

"What's the matter?" his friend inquired, relates the Washington Star. "Have some of your schemes turned out wrong?"

"My friend, there is sorrow in success as well as in failure. I was thinking of something I came across this morning while I was having my heating arrangements overhauled. It occurred to me some time ago that a man is at the mercy of the dealer who sells him coal. When a wagon backs up and dumps your fuel in the gutter I defy you to tell whether it's ten pounds or a hundred pounds under weight. So I went to work and burned midnight oil perfecting a device which was attached to the furnace and which weighed every shovelful of coal that I used before it dropped into the fire pot. All I did was to dump the coal into a hopper, and before it slid down it registered its weight on a dial. When the load of coal was gone I could tell exactly how many pounds of it there had been. The first time I tried I found there were seventy pounds coming to me."

"Did you tell the dealer about it?"

"I did."

"What did he do?"

"He called a man and threatened to have me put out. He said that I could get somewhere else for coal; he wouldn't sell me any more. I tried another dealer, and he vowed he'd sue me for libel. I went around from dealer to dealer, until there's only four whom I haven't patronized. I took the machine off. If I had kept it, there wouldn't be a place in town where I could get fuel to keep me from freezing. I was happy and trustful till I completed what I thought was to be a crowning achievement in modern invention. I realize now that all I did was to sit up nights to make myself miserable. I haven't the heart to patent the thing and put it on the market. I shudder at the thought of making anybody else as discouraged with life and as suspicious of his fellow man as I am."

He says:—"I heard of the wonderful cures effected by Dodd's Kidney Pills. I thought I would try them. I have tried one box, and I must say they have cured me. I have no objection to allowing you to publish this, as you see fit, so it may help others.

THE BLUEBIRD.

cold spells, and all of these were observed to be much emaciated.

"During the greater part of the season the food of the Bluebird consists of insects of different sorts, many of which are prejudicial to the crops, and it is in this connection that the absence of the birds will be chiefly felt by the farmer. One writer who has made the calculation estimates that from fifty to one hundred thousand insects will be killed by a pair of Bluebirds in the four months during which these constitute their principal food. Towards the close of the season fruits and seeds are also used, but the chief food of the Bluebird is insects.

"The Blue Jay and the Bluebird resemble each other in the general color of their plumage, but in all other respects they are as widely different as they can well be. In disposition the Bluebird is gentle, tender, loving, affectionate, while the Jay is harsh, cruel, treacherous, cunning. In the matter of diet the Jay is ready to use anything that is eaten by any other bird. Of course he is an epicure where there is any choice, but in spring he is glad to feed on the buds of the lilac and other shrubs. As the season advances he does not hesitate to rob the nests of other birds of eggs or young, tearing the latter to pieces like a hawk. Moths and butterflies also receive his attention, but as the fruit season approaches he revels amidst the abundance he finds in the woods. Beech nuts, acorns, chestnuts, all are enjoyed and many stowed away for winter use. He also hangs around the farm house, seeking a chance to steal grain, which makes him generally unpopular and liable to be shot as often as opportunity offers.

"There is still another little bird resembling the other two in color, but in other respects differing from both. This is the Indigo bird. The Bluebird is semi-domesticated and seems to delight in having his home near our dwellings, though of late he has been driven off by the house sparrow. The favorite perch of the male is on a bare twig near the top of a tree of medium height, from which he sends forth his spirited song to cheer his plainly dressed mate while attending to her domestic duties among the underbush. For food the Indigo bird sometimes takes beetles or other insects, but his short, stout, conical bill shows that nature intended him for a seed-eater, and it is among the seeds of our native weeds he finds his daily fare. He first appears in our woods in the early part of May and leaves again in September."

The night was frosty, bright and clear,
And Bessie, cozy as a kitten,
Was snuggled at my side, her dear
Small hand held in mine, for fear
It might chill through her mitten.

The sleigh bells jingled. I, absurd,
With Bessie's charms was deeply smitten.
The mare skimmed onward like a bird;
Of love I uttered not a word,
But still clasped hand and mitten.

"'Tis love that makes the world go round."
No truer words were ever written.
My tongue and Bessie's lips I found;
And when we parted, on the ground

DREAM WITHIN A DREAM.

Story Told by a Broker That Terrified an Attentive Listener.

They were discussing the subject of dreams, says the Detroit Free Press, and the broker, after hearing from most of the others, declined to advance an opinion, but said he would relate a dream he once had, and leave his hearers to draw their own conclusions.

"I was a young man of active habits and anxious to get rich by the shortest possible method consistent with honesty. I found myself in the western part of what is now the State of Washington. I met a rough miner who said he was about to depart for the section where the Blewett gold mines are now being operated, and wanted me to go along. His inducement was that we could realize 50 cents a pan at placer miner, which was a dazzling bonanza.

"I also met a man whom I had known in the East, and he advised against the project, because my proposed partner was under suspicion. He had started out on half a dozen expeditions with some tenderfoot, and always reurned alone, though nothing had been proven against him. But I resisted all opposing advice and went. The third night out we spread our blankets early and laid down, for we were tired, and a storm threatened. It must have been about midnight when I had the most blood-curdling dream. As plainly as I see you gentlemen now I saw that rough miner, who was accustomed to losing men whom he took out, standing over me with a drawn bowie and about to plunge it into my breast.

"I could not scream or move to offer resistance. The very terror of the situation must have awakened me. The cold sweat was pouring from every pore, and it was only when I realized the immediate safety of my position that I could move. Stealthily I moved with my fearings to where my horse was tethered, hastily prepared him for ture holder slides up and down a flat frame, trombone fashion, is the best sort of stereoscope for the purpose, although any will do, and the photograph that will give the best results is a cabinet size view of some locality, with people in it.

You put the photograph in the holder and focus it just so that you can see the faces clearly. Then close the left eye and look at the picture intently with your right eye, while you count thirty slowly. Now close the right eye and look at the picture with the left eye for the same time. Then open both eyes and stare at the picture without changing the focus.

Something queer will happen. The figures on the one side of the view will seem to move across the view and group themselves with those on the other side, and—this is the point of the experiment—the figures will always move away from the weak eye. Moreover, they move with a very precise relation of speed to the weakness of vision.

If the left eye, for example, is quite weak, the figures will move very quickly across the plane of sight to the right side, while if there is but a slight defect, the movement will be gradual, and so on.

A queer thing about this experiment is that, simple as it seems, it will bring out defects of vison that have never been suspected, and another queer thing is that it wil demonstrate the cases in which both eyes are of equal [illegible] surprisingly exceptional.

ticeable in the celebration of particular events, such as the birth of Christ, when young and old are too generally inclined to regard the observances characteristic of the occasion without thinking of their significance or the sentiment underlying them. If this decay of sentiment only affected the external aspects of our lives, our business, and the ordinary affairs and events of our everyday existence it were a matter of no great importance, but when it adversely influences our views on religion, on society, art, the love of nature, etc., we must admit that the matter is one of grave importance. Religion is largely a matter of sentiment, and he who regards society merely from the standpoint of the utilitarian, while he may be a fairly good citizen, will most assuredly be an unsympathetic, unsocial and not very amiable man. Art, the love of natural beauty and those graces and elegancies which give such an ideal charm to life, are almost exclusively dependant for their very existence upon sentiment. How sordid and mean would our lives be if divested of all those finer feelings, romantic notions and idealizations which keep alive the spiritual flame within us?

Kissing Under the Mistletoe.

The mystic misteloe bough then as now granted a kissing charter to the swains, and the maids were willing sufferers. The sacred mistletoe was regarded with religious veneration by the Druids, and its berries of pearl as symbols of purity and associated with the rites of marriage. From this the transition was but slight to the kiss beneath the cabalistic bough. This traditional sacredness, the genesis of which is unknown, has endured through the ages, and to-day for man and maid to meet beneath the mistletoe gives the right to a sacred kiss. One of our illustrations gives an artistic modern rendering of the custom.

Can't Go Home For Christmas.

No drearier mortal can be imagined than the man who cannot go home from college for Christmas. He hangs around the deserted buildings with a most forlorn air, or hovers over his study fire, if he has a study fire, in a vain attempt to get warmth. Or perhaps he takes a different tack, and thinks to find Christmas cheer in a lark all by himself. Alas! the spirit of Christmas is essentially communistic; to be thoroughly enjoyed, it must be shared. No theatre can appease the loneliness of the solitary one, and the only solace he finds is in sleep, where he can forget that he is a man who cannot go home for Christmas.

At Christmas.

Without, the frost winged breezes blow
Across the wold, above, below,
And the rose in every cheek is stirred
With the downy kiss of each snowflake bird.

Within, the cheerful Yule log fire
Brims with music's high desire,
Sheds light and cheer below, above,
Bespeaking the warmth of homely love.

CHRISTMAS HOKY POKY.

EPH DAVIS didn't agree with the world at all.

He found very few things which met his unqualified approval, and the more persons he found agreed upon a certain point the more certain was he to discover the utter weakness of their position. He was very shrewd and looked at the world from the heights occupied by a superior and complacent being. It amused him to see all the women agreeing on certain lines of house ornamentation. It provoked him to find all the men united on theories of improvement, dress and behavior. He particularly resented the universal surrender of the race to the spirit of Christmas.

"It's all hoky poky," said Zeph.

As Christmas approached his wife wondered if he would not break his usual habit and make some conventional preparation. She remembered a very pleasant gayety in these seasons when a girl, but had been unable to repeat them since becoming the wife of Zeph. And her little boy, now 6 years old, added to her uneasiness. He had caught something of the season's inspiration from the children who drift-hoping he could carry the dream unbroken. How they danced before him, those excellent animals! How gravely the birds addressed him and how reasonable it seemed that tin soldiers should become live dogs and bark aloud, and how swift it all was, for this was morning, and Dash, the hound, was challenging some noises he heard in the woods across the road.

This was just the same as any other morning to Zeph. He got up lazily and dressed in a flood of sunshine, shivering a little and complaining that his wife had no better fire. He looked out on the deep snow and knew the hunting would be excellent.

Just after breakfast a sleighload of people passed, their bells jingling with tempting melody and jingling still till the horses stopped in front of the squire's farmhouse, when they gave way to shoutings of cheer and answering shouts of welcome.

"Must be Miller's folks from Burr Oaks," said Zeph's wife, as she closed the door and wondered if her other dress was not better than this one.

H. B. SHERWOOD

inspiration from the children who drifted past his cabin home and from the activities at the great house of the squire when he went up there one day to do an errand for his mother.

He was full of questions which his mother could not entirely answer, and which he could not suspend when his father was at home. But down through his infant consciousness at last filtered the conviction that he and his household were outside the pale embraced in the reign of Santa Claus. He had no doubt the day held a great and joyful significance to the squire's children, nor that Santa Claus came down a chimney and gave presents to all the good little boys and girls in the world. Only, of course, his house was not included. The gentle sway of the Christ Child could not naturally embrace the little cabin at the edge of the woods. Yet he had an unformed, pathetic little regret that it was so.

Zeph was in town Christmas eve and staid a little later than usual, though that did not trouble his wife much. He was not in the habit of coming home till he got ready, not leaving till moved by the same consideration. Only he was sure to come some time, and always sober. He was quite superior to the nearly universal habit of acquiring a dual personality by imbibing stimulants. It was altogether an unmixed folly to him.

"Town's pretty lively, I reckon," said his wife as Zeph came in and prepared for supper. He did not remove an overcoat. He wore none. He looked upon that custom as quite unnecessary as popular notions usually were.

"Ya-as," snarled Zeph, grinning in derision of what he had seen. "Stores all lighted up and candy and things in the winders."

"Whut things in the winders, pap?" inquired the boy, his blue eyes large and bright.

"Oh, toys, and them things!"

"Whut things?" again, but hesitatingly.

Zeph glanced warningly at the boy, and then slowly replied:

"Skates an' red mittens an' some wooden soldiers and drums and pictur' books."

The boy had never seen the stores,

"WHAT PLUNDER, PAP?"

for he had never been in town, but he had in his mind a very vivid picture of the place and its glories. And he looked very straight at his father as that picture took form before him.

"Many people in town?" questioned the wife. She had seen those splendors the Christmas eve, and she had counted on seeing them again this season.

"Ya-as, the stores was crowded, and the streets was full of teams. Couldn't git no more'n 60 cents for that coon-skin and had to take that in trade. Wouldn't pay more'n 50 cents if I took it in cash. So I traded for some truck and come home. They tried to sell me a lot of plunder, but I don't go none on them things."

"Whut plunder, pap?" asked the boy. The resources for trimming his fancy stores were really very slender. He needed more material. Just a hint would do. It seemed so real to him.

"Oh, a tin horse and wagon and a candy bird and a woolly little sheep that says "bah!"

"Big sheep, pap, or just a lamb?"

"Naw. About so high." And Zeph measured a span from the top of the table.

That changed the whole interior of his wonder cave for the boy. These treasures were smaller than the natural size. If smaller, why could they not be made larger? So his wonderful creations were taking delightful shape. It was quite a picture he found himself arranging when his mother said from the depths of the dish pan, where she was finishing the supper work:

"You're soupd asleep, Billy. Go to bed."

And he hurried into his little cot,

The boy stood there at the window, with his chin on the sill, and tried to regain his dream estate, from which the daylight had ejected him. Presently he saw the squire's children coming down the road with a basket, and he went out and stood on the steps in the sunshine. The squire's children were taking a turkey to old Mrs. Stevens, down by the gate. They stopped at the gate, and he went down to look at their presents. They each had a pair of skates, and were going to try them on the lake if the ice was good. But no ice could add to the present pleasure of ownership. They had new shoes and a silk handkerchief, with a letter in the corner of it, and a number of candy horses, and one of the girls had a gold finger ring. They had hung their stockings on a line behind the stove, and everything was filled in the morning.

Little Billy added another view to his Christmas lore. It was a time for making people happy. He remembered a party of children that came down here in a light wagon when hazel nuts were ripe and stopped for a drink of water from the spring, and he found himself wondering what the day had brought to those children.

Of course it never occurred to him to take a personal view of the matter. He never imagined himself included in that wondrous embrace, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

His nose was red and his hands were thrust deep in his pockets when he returned to the house. But he sat on the chest there by the fireplace and wondered silently.

Zeph was greasing his boots, and regretting that he didn't have oil instead of tallow. He rather resented the fact that the house was tidier than usual, that a plate of apples was upon the table, and that his wife was rolling pie crust and cutting cookies—her hair done up as she used to wear it when he went a-wooing. He expressed his disapproval of all this hoky poky and asked her what she was going to have for dinner. She said nothing for a time. She wished he had not asked her. There was so little, but she had planned to make it appear as fair as possible.

Across her silence came the bark of Dash over there in the woods, and the hunter instinct in Zeph was aroused. Since no one had asked him to go hunting he felt no disinclination to look for game. So he glanced out of the window, caught sight of the hound sitting there in the timber, looking up for one moment and then turning his eyes to the house, barking occasionally the short, emphatic statement that he had found a squirrel.

Billy was in great glee. His mother had baked a colander full of cookies and had then moulded with her fingers, a little crudely perhaps, a number of animals from the dough. Billy didn't recognize all of them, but when she told him, he saw the points of resemblance. And when his father came back he was quite happy playing with them.

Zeph cut a hazel stick as he came back through the woods, and after the squirrels he had shot had been dressed he held them on the stick and broiled them before the fire. They were delicious, and there was a dish of mashed potatoes—quite an unusual thing—and some baked apples and the wonderful cookies. Billy couldn't imagine a better dinner than that. Zeph ate with great relish, but by no means forgetting to regard the whole thing as "hoky poky." And after dinner he went down to the saw mill and told stories with the rest of the men, coming home rather before they had exhausted their jug of applejack. He had taken one drink himself, and it may be that made the difference. Anyway he was moved to unusual behavior.

The fire was low, and he stirred up the burning ends of logs till the cabin was filled with a flood of light, and as he turned he saw there on the pillow at the side of his sleeping son's head a pitiful little menagerie of bent, brown dough, and knew that each animal had been perfect in the large blue eyes that had fought so hard to keep unclosed the heavy gates of dreams.

Zeph saw the happy face and knew that somewhere his boy was wandering among delights more rare than any his hand had given. And the spirit of contention, of rivalry, of a race, awaked within him.

"Huh!" he said, and wondered why the smoke should burn his eyes to weeping. Then he turned to the door and stole out in the moon-gemmed night.

Down the road he went with a sweeping step, full of vigor and with rising haste, till the miles lay behind him and he fronted the lights of the town. It was early evening, in spite of the hours of darkness, and Christmas joy was full. He turned neither to the right or the left, paid no attention to the ruddy doors of the saloons, where loud young men were boasting, or betting, or trying to quarrel. He kept right on till he reached the shop of the tinker, down by the bridge, and there he stamped the snow from his heavy boots.

The tinker had not expected a customer, and he had been looking at the toys left over from the sales of the season. He had done very well, but he wished now he had not bought so many. The hand on his latch lifted his hopes a little, and his eager face was a strange contrast with the puzzled countenance of Zeph, now for the first time in his life yielding to the weakness of scanning Christmas presents.

"How much for this?" inquired the countryman, touching a camel with his great forefinger. And the tinker was so willing to sell that he quoted a figure far below his ruling prices.

"Ya-as, and this" continued Zeph. It was a candy castle, with powdered gilt and frosted silver on the sides.

There was quite a store of painted woods and ruffled tins and moulded candy there at the end of the counter by the time Zeph reached the limit of his purse. He felt the same stirrings he had known while husking corn, when some boaster tried to beat him in the race. He bought without reflection, with no thought but that of giving Billy a better Christmas than other children had.

And then he tramped back home. There was no hurry in his walking now. He simply strode the miles, unconscious of his splendid muscles, assured of reaching home in time and giving little care to what the thing might mean.

One house was lighted brilliantly, and through uncurtained windows he saw a Christmas tree. The presents had been stripped away, but tapers burned there, and strings of wool and tiny flags.

"Santa Claus brought them there things on his way, out," said Zeph to himself. "He'll git to Billy on his trip back home." And then he tried to sneer at the whole affair.

At the first barb of light Zeph fought against his drowsiness and turned to wait till Billy's eyes should open. It seemed a slow, long time. But after awhile the large blue eyes unveiled, the sense of present things came back to him, and then they rested on those glories at his pillow. He did not move, but studied them a moment with a look Cutting up pranks with baby is great fun for a young mother. But before she can cut pranks with the baby she must have a healthy baby. A puny, sickly, peevish baby has no use for pranks. It lies in every young mother's power to insure the health of the expected newcomer. If she will see that the organs which make motherhood possible are healthy and vigorous, and will keep them so during the period preceding maternity, she may be sure that the baby will be healthy and happy.

A marvelous medicine for young mothers is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Taken during the period preceding motherhood it makes strong, healthy and vigorous the organs upon which rest the burdens of maternity. It allays inflammation, soothes pain, and restores steadiness to the nerves. It does away with the discomforts of the expectant period. It insures the health of baby and makes its coming easy and almost painless. It is the discovery of an eminent and successful specialist, Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription before my confinement, and I was only in labor a short time," writes Mrs. Minnie A. Peterson, Box 5, Easton, Fresno Co., Cal. "The physician said I got along unusually well. I think the medicine saved a great deal of suffering and I get all my friends who need it to try it."

One of the best-known of American medical men said: "If you want to reform a man, begin with his grandfather." That would be wise if it could be done. Since it cannot be done, try something else. Reform the future grandfathers and grandmothers. Do this through education. The greatest thing for a man or woman to know is himself or herself. To know one-half the capabilities and disabilities of the human body is a liberal education. A good start for this education is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. Any one can have this finely illustrated 1000-page book for the small price of thirty-one cent stamps. This is simply to pay for customs and mailing. If you would like the book in fine cloth binding instead of paper, send fifty stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

WHAT CHRISTMAS MEANS TO QUEEN VICTORIA

By Lady Jeune

HRISTMAS means to Queen Victoria very much the same thing as to her poorest subjects, for while delightful story [illegible] who seized the first opportunity of celebrating her emancipation by going out and driving all day long in a hansom cab selecting her Christmas presents. Never before had she driven in anything less magnificent than a royal carriage. The selection of the Queen's Christmas gifts, or those for any other occasion is made by herself at Windsor, or wherever the Court may be in residence. The tradesmen who are selected as royal tradesmen send over a very large quantity of articles suitable for the occasion, and they are left at the palace till the Queen has chosen what she wants. There are only a certain number of shops in London that have what is called a royal appointment or warrant, but those that have are allowed to display the royal arms over their shops and to use the words, "By appointment to Her Majesty, the Queen," on their bills. The Queen generally selects gifts from her own tradesmen, but there is great rivalry among all shopkeepers to secure a royal order, and the Princesses and ladies in waiting are often commanded to go outside the royal warrant holders, and if they see anything or hear of any very pretty and novel gift, to have it submitted to Her Majesty. The Queen buys largely of Scotch and Irish manufacturers and employs tradesmen in Edinburgh and Dublin, who also send specimens of their goods for Her Majesty's approbation. Scotch and Irish tweeds and cloths and homespun goods are largely bought and given to those who are likely to wear them and to whom they may be useful. There are, also, a very large number of poor people on the Queen's estates who are known to her, to whom she makes gifts of clothing.

Santa Claus Fills Princes' and Princess' Stockings.

To such of her children as are with her the Queen gives her gift personally, and with her little grandchildren the old fable of Santa Claus is upheld, and the royal stocking is very much heavier and more valuable from the beloved grandmamma's gift. To those children who are away the gift is sent with a letter, generally by messenger, sometimes by post, but to those who live abroad a Queen's messenger takes the gift, and the Queen's letter which accompanies it. To the members of the household the gift is either sent or given with a gracious message or some words of kind, affectionate greeting. To any crowned head who may be the recipient of a royal Christmas gift, the Queen would certainly write an autograph letter, but to those of her immediate entourage a message or a letter written at her desire would accompany her gift. To her German relations the Queen's letter would be in English, to any other royal personage it would be in French, but to all her children she writes in English.

HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA.

It is quite impossible to form any idea as to the value of the presents made by the Queen or given to her. In some cases, when her gifts consist of India shawls, jewelry and the like, they are very valuable because they are unique, but the presents she gives to her family, or in turn receives from

Merit Talks

"Merit talks" the intrinsic value of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Merit in medicine means the power to cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses actual and unequalled curative power and therefore it has true merit. When you buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, and take it according to directions, to purify your blood, or cure any of the many blood diseases, you are morally certain to receive benefit. The power to cure is there. You are not trying an experiment. It will make your blood pure, rich and nourishing, and thus drive out the germs of disease, strengthen the nerves and build up the whole system.

EQUINE CHARACTER.

NO TWO ALIKE AND THE MAJORITY HAVE PRONOUNCED TRAITS.

Instances of Horse Causation That Seem to Be More Than That Resulting From Mere Instinct—Read, There May Be Something in This.

The development of character in animals is a matter on which scarcely any two persons will agree, writes Francis Trevelyan in the New York Journal. There is a litter of puppies—uncouth, blundering collies—in a stable yard not a hundred miles from Broadway, and in the coachman house, fronting on that yard dwells a parrot. The sagacious bird, being of a teasing disposition, has any amount of fun with these puppies, "yapping" at them in excellent imitation of their own style while at play, and "sicoing" them on when their scrambles became so rough as to border on the verge of canine hostility. But most people would laugh and remark how wonderfully imitative the bird was, not allowing that his hoarse chuckles are anything but a copy of his master, the coachman.

Thus horses are very seldom credited with the power which they certainly possess, if not of thinking and reasoning, at least of recognizing facts and circumstances. That horses' memories are surprisingly good has been vouched for time and again by stories of how they will even after the lapse of years recognize some once familiar voice, while almost all can vouch that the average horse never forgets a stopping place or a turning. The shortest trip that a certain very leisurely pony I used to know was ever asked to make was to the family doctor's. And every time Mr. Pony was called upon to pass that house he would use his best endeavors to turn into the drive by breaking into a run. There was a steeplechaser in training last year who had a nasty fall at the "Liverpool" on one race course, and not only would he always refuse and bolt at that identical jump, but would have none of another "Liverpool" constructed on the same grounds. Yet on other steeplechase courses this particular form of obstacle had no special terrors for him.

The race course seems to especially accentuate character in horses. No two animals go to the post in precisely the same way. Salvator was the so strange that Zeph saw things his wisdom had not dreamed. Then Billy's eyes were closed again, and soon the larger breathing told that he was deep in dreamland paths, with richer treasures on each hand than there had been before.

He roused at length and saw the toys again.

"I dreamt of them," he said, and wondered why his mother smiled. It was long before he dared to touch them, and all through the day his boyish play would be suspended, and he would look at them as if afraid that they would vanish into dreams again—the dreams where he was sure his happy eyes had found them.

"But it's all hoky poky," said Zeph to his wife, as he shouldered his ax and went down to the mill for the day.

with them it is a time of enjoyment, in so far as their small means will admit, so with the Queen it is a season when she gathers as many of her family around her as can leave their own homes and children, and it is sanctified by the deepest and tenderest memories of her past life. The Queen's family, taken in its widest sense—her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren—is now so large, numbering nearly 60 persons, that it is almost impossible for her to send or give each member a separate gift, and as her Chistmas and other gifts are more or less costly, such liberality would involve a very considerable expenditure. To each of her children, and to their children, the Queen gives Christmas gifts, and in her turn receives them. The Prince and Princess of Wales and their children, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Empress Frederick, the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg, the Duchess of Albany, the Prince and Princess Christian, their sons and daughters, and Princess Louise and Lord Lorne, as well as Princess Henry of Battenberg and her children, receive substantial tokens of her affection and good will. Beyond this immediate family circle the Queen, with rare exceptions, does not go. All her other relatives, save those which she has outside the English shores, are too distant to count among those who naturally would receive a gift from her, with, perhaps, the exception of an English cloak, a wrap, or a small cart which she may give to some infant great-grandchild, such as she has given the Grand Duchess Olga of Russia, her last great-grandchild. The Queen generally gives a useful Christmas gift, or something pretty to put on a table or to ornament a home, chosen from among the endless fancy gifts which are invented each succeeding Christmas. To some of the grandsons, it is said, the Queen gives "tips," and to the younger Princesses she sometimes gives a gown or a beautiful piece of material, to use as their fancy dictates.

The Queen's Gifts to Friends and Servants.

The Queen does not give, nor is she expected to give, any presents to her officials at Court, nor to any members of the Government. There are many members of the Government, of both political sides, for whom the Queen has a strong personal feeling of regard and affection, on whom she does bestow a small token of her liking, but it is done purely as a friend, and is not in any way expected. The late Lord Beaconsfield, Lord Melbourne, Lord Salisbury, as well as others of her well-known people in the official world, from time to time received gifts from the Queen, and probably other less well-known people in the official world, but that is because they are personal friends, and would probably under ordinary circumstances receive gifts. The members of the Queen's household stand, of course, in an entirely different position, for from their regular attendance on the Queen they almost become members of the large family of which she is the head, and those for whom she has a great affection, or who have been long in her service, or who happen to be in waiting on these festive occasions, usually receive a Christmas box from the Queen, sometimes given on Christmas day, or at the Christmas tree, which has always been a great institution among all the members of the royal family. The servants of the royal household, also, always get some gift on these occasions—indeed, no one in the Queen's service is ever forgotten. Her kindness and sympathy extend to the humblest of her dependents, and nothing is more highly prized and cherished by her servants than the small gifts by which she shows how much she values and appreciates their faithful service.

How the Queen Does Her "Shopping."

It is obvious that the Queen cannot indulge in the luxury of "shopping," or shall we say, is mercifully prevented that affliction? She cannot, like her daughters, the Princesses, go about among the shops at Christmas time and select gifts, and, like ordinary women, chat and discuss the merits of each article. The freedom the English Princesses enjoy is one of the most delightful features of their lives, for after they marry they go about like any ordinary mortals, and can do their own shopping, and, as they are not expensive. The royal purse is not an inexhaustible one, and the claims on it are enormous, so that the presents given by royal people must always be regarded in the light of souvenirs and not as costly gifts.

The Queen is the recipient of many telegrams on Christmas day bringing her greetings and wishing her many similar anniversaries. From the distant children's homes the electric spark flashes its message of love from her absent ones. It is difficult to realize how busy a day Christmas is, with receiving and answering loving greeting by telegraph, for the royal family uses that mode of communication more than any other. The Queen and her children have each a private wire. One has a glimpse of how strong the Christmas feeling is in our royal family in reading the "Life of the Prince Consort," and that of Princess Alice (the Grand Duchess of Hesse), who wrote every Christmas to her royal mother, describing her Christmas day, with its gifts, its tree for all the tenants and household, and often affectionate thanks to her mother for the many Christmas gifts she had sent her and her children. —Ladies' Home Journal for December.

most characteristic horse in this respect that I have ever noticed. He seemed to feel himself a king among his kind. His bearing was nothing short of lordly. As he walked out of the paddock he would fling his head high and glance around in a disdainful way, as if to say: "What is this lot I have to beat to-day. I don't care much, for I know I can do it, but I might as well look them over."

A striking contrast to the proud son of the "Prince of the T.Y.C." was his mate, Firenze. A bustling, fidgety, distinctly feminine creature she was. She would come toddling out of the paddock, confident enough, but "all of a flutter," as it were. "Well, well well!" one could imagine her saying to herself "what's this, what's this? Got to race again against that same old lot? Dear me, what odd things these men are! beat them the other day and what in the world have I got to do it over again for?"

Mares in training are funny creatures anyway. They do not train like horses. "Rattle-brained filly" is an expression one hears so constantly in the course of a year that one grows heartily sick of it. Their nerves seem to go all to pieces under the st[illegible] when they develop into [illegible] horses they are funny. In the majority of instances horses do not mean any harm when they kick. They do it to let off a little of their high spirits or to relieve their tempers, just as a peppery man will swear without thinking what he is saying. But some are, of course, really vicious. Sir Walter is one of the most curious horses I have run across in this respect. In the paddock, after an easy race he is as kind and gentle as a kitten, but if he has had a gruelling race beneath whip and spur, keep out of range of his heels or teeth.

Exile was, perhaps, the most notorious kicker we have had on the turf in late years, and to some of his progeny he seems to have impaired the partiality for this form of exercise. At the post Exile would deliver himself of a performance that was startling in its rapidity and vigor. It was always necessary to hold him or he would have stove in some other horse's ribs, or smashed a jockey's leg, but it seemed to be more an emphatic announcement that he was sick and tired of the game than anything else.

Instances, not alone among thoroughbreds, might be indefinitely accumulated. It is a wonder that some of the savants who devote themselves to the evolution of monkey language do not take the chance of bringing out a treatise on the mute language do not horse. It is a rich and comparatively unexplored field, and one which would, at any rate, interest many more persons than monkeys do.

"Well, then, it must be that beautiful creature over there."

"Yes; that's why I guessed she was your wife. You are, by long odds, the homliest man in the room, and people always marry that way."—New York Weekly.

Miss Kimberly's Song Recital.

A large and fashionable audience attended Miss Marie Kimberly's song recital in the Opera house on Tuesday evening. It was, comparatively speaking, Miss Kimberly's first bow to a Napanee audience since her return from Toronto and all were more than delighted with her efforts as was evinced by the freqaent encores accorded her. The evening was decidedly chilly and Miss Kimberly was suffering with a cold, but notwithstanding these disadvantages she acquitted herself in a manner that won the appreciation of the audience. Miss Kimberly has a powerful soprano voice, which was heard to good advantage in her opening number, Cavatina—"Nobil Signors," (Les Huguenots) Meyerbeer. She has her voice under excellent control, and her high notes were particularly well taken. It is not our intention to essay a criticism, but we might say in passing that Miss Kimberly's voice seems to us well adapted for oratorio. Her selections on the violin also were well rendered and much appreciated. Miss Kimberly was ably assisted by Mr. Oscar Wenborne, soloist of St. James' Cathedral, Toronto, and Miss Nellie Herring, of Napanee. Mr. Wenborne possesses a fine musical baritone voice and his every number was greeted with hearty applause. Miss Herring was heard to good advantage in "The Children of the King," and in response to a hearty encore, rendered in a pleasing manner "Annie Laurie." Miss Laura Ward acted as accompanist in her usual efficient and brilliant manner.

Schuyler Loucks came near receiving a quick passage to the Great Beyond on Sunday. He was riding the bumpers of a freight train, and had calculated on it stopping at Napanee to take water. Instead, however the freight went whizzing through Napanee at the rate of 40 or 50 miles an hour, and there was notheng for Schuyler to do but jump, or to be carried on to Belleville. He jumped and was found a few minutes latter in an unconsious condition. Beyond a few severe bruises on the head no other injuries were sustained, and he is now able to be around again.

What Wonderful Strides

Have been made in the manufacture of jewelry in this country in late years. Immense factories have sprung up manufacturing everything the retail trade requires and in such large quantities that a substantial reduction in the prices is the result. This has put a stop to the old fashioned way of country jewelers doing their own manufacturing. Now-a-days each line has men specialists in it to do the work and who do nothing else. For example the manufacture of rings is in the hands of rings makers, the sitting of stones of experienced stone setters, engravers, etc., these men attend solely to their department so is it in every other department of the trade. Thus it is plain that the retail jewelry with a single man manufacturing is simply not in it as regards either skill of workmanship experience variety of design, or most important, price. Why the machinery alone used costs hundreds of dollars and these have constantly to be replaced as new styles come in. Enough has been said and I think you are convinced that factory made jewelry etc., can be sold much cheaper than the manufactures of a private individual and so we F. Chinneck jeweler and watchmaker claim to sell all our lines the cheapest in town. Added to this we have a 20 per cent. discount cash sale now on until Xmas. F. Chinneck's Jewelery Store.

Resolution of Regret.

At the annual meeting of the Beekeepers Association held at Toronto on Dec. 9th the following resolution was moved by Mr. Helmes and seconded by J. K. Darling and passed unanimously:—Whereas, the Ontario Beekeepers' Association has since its last meeting in convention lost an honored and respected officer by the death of Allen Pringle, of Selby, and whereas, the organization of this association and its incorporation by acts of Parliament was in a very considerable measure due to his clever assistance and shrewd management, and whereas during the many years in which he has served in an official capacity, occupying at times the highest posts of honor in the gift of the assocation, he has by his genial and friendly manner won the love of all who knew him, while at the same time his mature judgment and keen foresight in matters pertaining to our industry has commanded respect, even those who in some points differed with him being unconsciously drawn toward him, and whereas the beekeeping world bow their heads in sorrow at the announcement of his death. Therefore be it resolved that the Ontario Beekeepers' Association take this the first opportunity of giving a united expression of regret that we shall see Allen Pringle no more in our assemblies, nor feel the warm grasp of his hand in friendly greeting again on the shores of time: and that we, his colleagues, extend to the widow and family of our late friend and co-worker our heartfelt sympathy and condolence in this, their great trial, and that we trust that through the blinding mist of tears they may be able to see the hand of the great architect of the universe, and to hear His sweet voice saying, "Fear not, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," and be it further resolved that this resolution be recorded on the minutes, and an engrossed copy signed by the President and Secretary be sent to the widow of the late Allen Pringle.

We ought to be able to place on the field this season a team that will sweep everything before it and bring the cup to Napanee. It is worth the effort—let the boys get down to practice.

The Assizes.

The assizes closed on Friday at noon, the following is the balance of the docket and how disposed off.

In the matter of McGinness vs Dafoe of which the particulars of the case appeared in our last issue, the jury brought in a verdict of $75 for the plaintiff. The Chief Justice delivered judgment awarding McGuiness $75 with costs on high court scale.

Vine vs Vine—An action brought by James Vine against his step-mother, Mrs. Edward Vine, to get possession of the homestead. The Chief Justice reserved decision, but has since given judgment for the plaintiff for the lands in question, and that the plaintiff pay to the defendant $70 upon her given peaceful and quiet possession of the premises and upon the same being left in as good order and repair as they are now in. Deroche & Madden for plaintiff; Mr. Clute and G. F. Ruttan for defendant.

Taylor vs Finkle—An action brought by Joseph Taylor, of Newburgh, who owns a small axe factory on the north branch of the Napanee river, against C. H. Finkle, to restrain him from backing water upon his (Taylor's) water wheel, as he contends it prevents it from running. There was a decided difference of opinion between the engineers called, A. R. Davis, Mr. Taylor's engineer, claiming that the water did back up on the wheel, and Fred Miller and Rudd Perry, the engineers called by the defence claiming that Mr. Taylor was in no ways inconvenienced or prevented from running his wheel by reason of Mr. Finkle's occupancy of the river. Judgment was reserved until next spring, when the Chief Justice said he would send an independent engineer to examine the property. D. H. Preston, Q. C., for plaintiff; Herrington & Warner for defendant.

Married at Adolphustown.

On Monday, Dec. 21st, 1896, the Adolphustown Methodist church was the scene of one of the prettiest church weddings that has taken place for some time. It was the marriage of Maude, the accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Cadman, of Adolphustown, to Mr. W. G. Fretts, of Hawley, a young man held in high esteem. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Nolan, nee Miss C. Janes, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. R. M. Pope, of Morven, cousin of the bride, who was ably assisted by Rev. Snowden, of Napanee. Miss Cadman was attended by her cousin, Miss Ila Miller, of Kingston, while the groom was attended by his cousin, Mr. Charles VanSlyck, of Morven. The bride and groom were a pleasant sight indeed, the one arrayed in a beautiful and becoming traveling costume, and the other in the conventional black dress suit, and after they had been pronounced man and wife they most gracefully received the ardent congratulations of their relatives and friends. Miss Maude Cadman, called thus for the last time, is a product of Adolphustown of whom no words but those of praise and compliment can be said She is a young lady of b autiful character, quiet culture, most amiable habits and lovable manners. By all who know her she is held in the highest esteem and she goes to her new home with the best wishes of the entire community. Mr. W. G. Fretts, the dignified young husband, who has won such an estimable and lovely prize in the matrimonial drawing, is a prominent model farmer of Hawley. He is highly honored by all who know him and is in every way worthy of the confidence and affection of his happy bride. The young husband and bride left on the noon train for Montreal. After a brief visit with relatives there they will return to Hawley and enter upon the serious duties of life in a comfortable home and a prosperous business.—COM.

Samuel Weese and His Wife Caught in the "Bath Road Death Trap."

"The Bath Road Death Trap," as the Grand Trunk railway crossing at Collins Bay has come to be known, has added another to its already long list of tragedies, and another family is submerged in gloom through the reprehensible negligence of the G.T.R authorities. The latest victims are Mr. and Mrs. Weese, a respectable and industrious farmer and his wife, of the 2nd concession of Ernestown.

On Saturday last Mr. Weese and his wife left their home near Bath to attend the Kingston market. After disposing of their garden stuff on the market Mr. and Mrs. Weese had the usual purchases to make—there were toys to be selected to gladden the hearts of the children at Xmas and the usual household necessaries, and when they started on the return trip homeward it was well on in the evening and darkness was descending. The evening was frosty and the couple were well muffled to protect themselves from the weather. All went well until they reached the Collins Bay railway crossing where death like a hideous phanton lurked among the shadows. All unconscious of danger Mr. Weese and his wife drove across the track just as a west bound freight train swung around the curve and in a moment the engine had crashed into them. Mr Weese and his wife were thrown a distance of nearly fifty-feet, the horses were killed instantly and the wagon splintered into a thousand pieces.

Mrs. Weese was found under the remains of the wagon, in a semi concions condition. On examination it was found that she had sustained a very serious scalp wound and a severe injury to her hip, but reasonable hopes are entertained of her recovery. Her husband was found to be in a more precarious condition and from the first it was apparent that he was fatally injured. The right side of his chest was crushed in and several ribs broken. One end of the fractured rib penetratad the lung. Besides these enumerated there were other injuries of a less serious character. Both the sufferers were conveyed to the Kingston general hospital, where Mr. Weese breathed his last shortly after eleven o'clock on Sunday night. On Sunday morning the wounded man was informed of his approaching end, and the ante-mortem statement of the dying man was taken down, and Dr. Smythe afterwards drew out his will.

Samuel Weese was a son of Stephen Weese, who resides near Napanee Mills. He was 36 years of age and a steady, sober and industrious farmer. He was much esteemed among his large circle of friends and acquaintances and his sudden and untimely end will be learned of with general regret throughout the country. Deceased leaves six children to mourn his sad death, the eldest being only 10 years of age. The remains passed through Napanee on Tuesday, and will be interred in the Morven cemetery.

Mrs. Weese, the injured lady, is a daughter of Norris Miller, near Bath, and is 29 years of age. The latest reports to hand say she is resting somewhat easier and no doubts are entertained of her ultimate recovery.

The Kingston Whig gives the following description of the locality in which the accident occurred:

"For the better understanding of the manner in which the accident occurred, by those who are not familar with the locality, it may be said that for a long distance before the fatal crossing is reached by a person travelling from Kingston to Collins Bay the railway track runs parallel with and a few yards from the highway. Here and there the track is considerably above the level of the road, from which a train passing over these portions can be easily seen. But as the "death-trap" is approached the train is hidden from the view of the traveller on the highway by a deep cut into which it runs, and by the high ridge of land between the railway and the road, and on the sides and top of which is a more or less dense growth of timber and shrubs. So that, while the track is on the same plane with the road, it is utterly impossible for the traveller on this portion of the latter, to see a passing train, no matter how sharp a look-out he may keep. And in the case of a person riding in such a heavy vehicle as a "lumber wagon," the rumble of his own conveyance drowns that made by the passage of the train. To a man standing at either side of the track where it crosses the road, an approaching train is not visible until it emerges from the cut on to the crossing—too late for the driver of a team in the act of going across the track to make good his escape."

Great interest is being manifested in the affair by the children, and their relatives and friends will no doubt give them a crowded house.

As will be noticed by his card in another part of this issue Mr. Ira B. Sills has signified his intention of remaining in the field as a candidate for the Napanee and Richmond division of the county council. Mr. Sills is of the opinion that a little new blood in the county council will do that body no harm. Mr. Sills is a successful farmer and if elected will make an ideal representative. He has had considerable experience in municipal matters and we bespeak for him a hearty support, not only in Richmond but Napanee as well Pleased With Her First Experience.

A wife and mother living in St. John, N. B., says: "I shall ever pleasantly remember my first experience with Diamond Dyes. My husband had a Sunday coat that was getting to be a dingy and faded shade of brown. He needed a new one very badly, but could not afford it. After a day or two of very serious consideration, I suggested that the coat might be dyed a good black, and stated that I would undertake the work. I had never dyed anything before; but having heard how easy it was to dye with the Diamond Dyes, I bought a package of Fast Diamond Dye Black for Wool and preceeded with the operation. I was quite nervous and fearful lest I would completely spoil the coat; but after following closely the directions for dyeing, I was overjoyed with my victory. I was successful beyond all expectations, and my husband was delighted. The coat when dried, pressed and finished looked like a new one from a tailoring establishment. Thanks for your magnificent dyes."

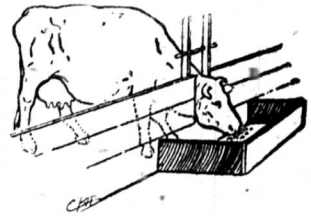
HOW TO FEED APPLES.

Undesirable Surplus Can Be Turned Into Milk and Butter.

The cow that has her own way in eating apples or potatoes, namely, picking them up at leisure from the ground or low manger unmolested, will seldom choke. I often feed apples, especially large ones, whole and am not in great fear of accident resulting from the practice. Yet ordinarily I have the apples ground through the root-cutter, which undoubtedly is the better way. Thus the ground apples, the cut hay or straw and the grain ration can all be mixed and eaten together. If I had no root-cutter, I think I would chop the apples coarsely in a large plank box, using a sharp spade to chop them with, or arrange the manger somewhat on Mr. Woodward's plan, here



FEEDING APPLES TO COWS.

illustrated. He says: "If a pair of posts or stakes be firmly set in the ground or made fast to the floor like a pair of stanchions, just far enough apart to admit a cow's neck, and a hole be bored just high enough so that a pin put through will prevent the animal raising her head quite level, it will be impossible for the apples to roll down into the throat and choke her. The same apparatus will prevent animals choking when eating potatoes or any other food. What makes the animal choke is raising the head so high that the pieces slip, by their own weight, into the gullet." I think that the instructions and information, as here given, should induce those among our apple-producing friends who have yet been in doubt as to the advisability of feeding apples to relieve the country of the otherwise undesirable surplus by turning it into milk, butter and meat. Now, in its great wealth, it is really a source of annoyance and loss. It can be made a source of income.—Farm and Fireside.

Ripened Cream Butter Flavor.

Ripened cream butter flavor, which, says Hoard's Dairyman, in its highest expression rules all the best wholesale markets, depends, says that paper, upon the following conditions:

(1) Milk and cream as free from all dirt, dust, taint, or vegetable flavors as possible. The place to start towards securing this desirable flavor is in the care of the cows, care of the milk and the character of the food given the cows. Here is where neatness and watchful care of stables, health of cows, ventilation, sunlight in the stable and many other things play so important a part. Right here is where so many patrons of creameries fail.

(2) The second condition lies in the length of time the cow has been in milk, together with the fact whether she is three months or more in calf. Stripper's milk is deficient in fine butter flavor: It is noticed that when the cow has passed say three or four months in gestation the finer flavoring elments of the fat are lacking. For this reason it is thought that they are drawn off through the economy of nature in the creation of the brain and nervous system of the offspring. Lacking these essential elements of flavor and nerve growth, stripper's milk is found to be unfit to feed infant children, which is not the case with farrow cow's milk. For these reasons it has been found in practice that it is well to have a few cows in the herd coming fresh every month in the year, as their milk greatly improves the flavor.

(3) The proper care of the milk as soon as drawn from the cow, care being taken to rigidly exclude it as soon as drawn. It must be kept in pure water or air, and the cream must be equally well guarded.

(4) The final step taken is in the ripening of the cream. To produce the finest market flavor, the cream must pass through a process of lactic fermentation, as well as bacterial development, all of which acts on the casein or cheese element in the cream, and if carried to perfection leaves the right flavor in the butter fat.

How to Make Paper Flower Pots.

A serviceable and yet inexpensive device, so simple that the gardeners' children can make it, is the paper flower-pot, especially designed for seedlings.

MAKING PAPER FLOWER POTS.

On a piece of stiff paper draw two concentric circles of six and three inches radius respectively, and cut out a portion of the ring thus formed, about eight inches long and of the shape of the upper diagram in the illustration. Using this as a pattern cut as many like forms from stiff manilla paper as may be desired. On opposite margins, and about five-eights of an inch from each end, cut radially half way across the strips, as shown by the lines a b in the diagram. Now coil the strips and slip the ends together along the cut lines and the flower-pot is complete as shown in the lower sketch. When the seedlings or cutting have been placed in these pots, they should be plunged into sand or soil until ready to be shifted to larger pots or to be transplanted. The plant may then be readily removed without disturbing the roots by simply tearing off the projecting strips, and the paper unwrapped from the soil. These paper pots can also be used to great advantage in starting young strawberry plants.—American Agriculturist.

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

THE INAUGURATION OF THE NEW COUNCIL.

The Mayors's Address—The Various Officers Appointed—The Standing Committees for the Year. Everything in full Swing.

At 11 a.m. on Monday the members of the new council assembled at the Council Chamber and solemnly took the declaration of office After the usual preliminaries incidental to inauguration had been adjusted the councillors ranged themselves around the horseshoe as follows and listened to Mayor Ward's excellent address; Reeve Leonard, Deputy Reeve Madole, Couns. Alexander, Boyle, Dey, Alysworth, Lowry, Carson, Miller, Perry and Ming.

THE MAYOR'S ADDRESS.

GENTLEMEN,—We believe every member of this council is desirous of doing what is best for the prosperity of Napanee. The important question is in what direction does the prosperity of the town lie?

Although we have good water power and shipping facilities by rail and water, it does not appear that we have much reason to hope to become a large manufacturing town. The corporation has done considerable in the way of encouraging manufacturing industries, with varying success; but we think any more bonuses is out of the question. If additional manufactures are established here it should be because the existing and prospective advantages are such as to make them profitable. We think our prosperity lies chiefly in three directions.

First, as a commercial centre of a magnificent agricultural country. Our merchants and stores are such as are found in very few places outside of the large cities. We have enterprising dealers in dairy and other agricultural produce and it should be our policy to favor their operations in every possible manner.

Secondly, as an educational centre. We have a large amount invested in schools, which are very justly the pride of every citizen, and we should do all we can to maintain the high standard we have reached and thereby attract people to the town as transient and permanent residents.

Thirdly, we may hope to prosper by making Napanee a desirable place to reside for those who are in no active business, and it is in this last direction that we the council can do most to aid both the merchants and educational interests. We should endeavor to make the town healthy, comfortable, beautiful and cheap, that is low in taxation etc.

As to the question of healthiness, we are favored by nature in situation and character of soil. The heavy clay upon which the town is built prevents soakage and as a consequence, wells, upon which we are yet dependent for water for drinking and culinary purposes, are good and safe. When it is desirable and practicable we can easily obtain pure water for our water works from any of the several large drift formations only a short distance away. Our most pressing need is proper sewers, and I think we should commence at once purchased at a sale for taxes due by Wm. Burns and conducted by the town. It was referred.

J. H. Friskin, Sec. of Fire Brigade, notified the council that the lanterns in the fire hall were leaky and no use, and that a half dozen new ones should be provided. Referred.

S. C. Warner, town solicitor, notified the council that in the action Town vs S. Gibson, judgment for $10 had been awarded. The action brought against Alex. Henry for taxes had been postponed.

A communication from the Fire Brigade recommending that H. R. Savage be appointed Chief and C. L. Shannon, assistant chief for the year 1897 was read and laid on the table.

A by law for the appointment of a High School Trustee was next taken up. The blank was on motion filled by ballott and resulted in the election of J. L. Boyes by the following vote: J. L. Boyes 6, Dr. Bissonnette 5.

A by-law for the appointment of an assessor was next taken up, resulting in the election of A. Rendell on the following vote: A. Rendell 6, J. C. Huffman 5, Robert Boyes 1. The salary was fixed at $100.

The following appointments were made by by-law:

Sanitary Inspector, E. B. Perry, at a salary of $50 per annum. Member Board of Health, Geo. A. Cliffe. Town Solicitor, S. C. Warner, at a salary of $75 per annum. Chief Fire Engineer, H. R. Savage, salary $20. Assistant, C. L. Shannon, salary $15.

Court of Revision: Mayor Ward, Reeve Leonard, Deputy-reeve Madole, Couns. Carson and Miller.

$50 was ordered placed in the hands of the Poor & Sanitary Committee.

Council adjourned.

A PHILOSOPHIC ENTERPRISE.

A Man Who Believed in Yielding Gracefully to the Inevitable.

The hardware dealer came up to attend to a serene-looking old gentleman, who had been drawing something with a lead pencil on the wrapping paper on the counter.

"There," the customer said, holding up the results of his efforts "you see that drawing?"

"You mean that circle?"

"It's a circle as near as I could approximate it without instruments. I wish to submit that as the plans and specifications for an augur. I desire to purchase a tool that will bore a hole just that size."

"You want it for a very exact piece of work?"

"Yes, sir."

The dealer sold him the augur, and then remarked:

"If you are a builder, I'd like to show you some new goods we've got in in the way of carpenters' tools."

"It wouldn't be of the slightest use. This will be my debut as an artisan. If I weren't a humane and sympathetic person I wouldn't begin at this late day in life, but I know just what I want done, and I won't trust it to a hired man. Every night for the last three weeks I have heard gnawings around the woodwork in the sleeping-room."

"Mice?"

"It must be mice. Now, these animals have their communities and thoroughfares just the same as people have."

"You ought to set traps for them."

"It wouldn't do any good. As soon as you catch one, others will come. A certain area of available territory is in the economy of nature expected to support a certain number of mice, and there's no use in trying to depopulate it. The best thing to do is to arrange it so they will make as little disturbance as possible. I am even-tempered, but I confess that the gnawing annoys me. But it's evidently occasioned by some plans for street extension that they have decided to carry out, and there is no use in delaying the undertaking by interfering with them. So I have located the spots where they are operating and taken the measure of a hole they have already gnawed. Now I am going to take this augur and bore holes wherever they're needed, and thereby greatly facilitating their endeavors, and securing to myself several hours of much-needed sleep every night."

Hymenial.

A quiet wedding took place at the residence of Mr. A. C Parks, Napanee, on Thursday, when Mr James McMurrin, a prosperous and highly respected farmer of Adolphustown, was united in wedlock to Mrs. Wm. Sharpe, of Hay Bay. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. W. Peck. THE EXPRESS extends congratulations.

A Pretty Wedding.

A quiet and pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Patrick's church, Napanee on Monday morning when the Rev Father Hogan united in the holy bonds of wedlock Miss Ruby Slaven, eldest daughter of Mr. P. Slaven, Deseronto, and Mr. M. J. Connoly, a rising young barrister, of Boston, Mass The bride is well known in Napanee, where she was a general favorite, We extend congratulations.

A Sudden Death.

It is our sad duty to chronicle this week the sudden and unexpected death of Mr. Michael Pringle, one of the most esteemed and highly respected residents of the township of Richmond, Up to a few days before his fatal illness Mr. Pringle was apparently in good health. He passed away at his residence in the 3rd con. of Richmond, on Monday afternoon, at 3 o'clock in full possession of all his faculties. A half an hour before his demise he sat up in bed and conversed with those around him and appeared quite strong, and didn't complain of suffering any pain. His death is attributed to inflammation of the bowels Deceased was one of the most successful farmers in this district and was admired and respected for his probity, industry and integrity. He was of a genial and kindly disposition and had a host of warm friends who will regret his untimely taking off. Deceased was fifty two years of age. He was twice married His first wife, Margaret Sills, bore him three children, two sons, Ryerson and Fred, on the homestead, and one daughter, Mrs. Daytus Denison, of Selby. His second wife, a Miss Lucas, of Moscow, is left to mourn.

Deceased leaves three brothers and one sister, Ezra, of Napanee, Ira, of Collins Bay, Sydney, of Amherst Island, and Mrs. Scott, of Muskoka. His father, Mr. Orrin Pringle, 79 years of age, also survives him.

Deceased was an excellent neighbor and friend and will be greatly missed. He was a member of the Western Methodist church and a consistent christian. The funeral took place on Wednesday to the Huffman cemetery and was largely attended, testifying to the high esteem in which deceased was held by all.

Ocular Appreciation.

A clergyman and one or his elderly parishioners were walking home from church one icy day last winter, when the old gentleman slipped and fell flat on his back. The minister, looking at him a moment, and being assured that he was not hurt, said to him:

"James, sinners stand on slippery places."

The old gentleman looked up as if to assure himself of the fact, and said:

"I see they do, but I can't."—Tit-Bits.

"Jeff" Lavis as a Prisoner.

While Jefferson Davis wsa a prisoner at Fortress Monroe he was guarded by Second Lieutenant Upham, since Governor of Wisconsin, says the Detroit Tribune. The two were on friendly terms, as Davis was interested in Wisconsin men and matters. While a young man he had crossed that state twice from Milwaukee to Prairie du Chien, and once from Fort Howard to the same place, using only Indian trails, and became very familiar with the different routes. Governor Upham says that he was much struck by his prisoner's wonderful memory. In a corner of his casemate in the fortress Davis had a pile of newspaper clippings two feet high, made up in large part of articles about himself taken from Northern journals. He was always treated with great courtesy, was never put in chains, as has been asserted, and Mrs. Davis was allowed to come and go as she would.

constructing sewers in accordance with the plan we have had drawn out by an engineer. We are by arrangement with the Water Works Co. entitled to some revenue from such sewers, and in some parts of the town that revenue would be sufficient to pay the interest upon the town's share of cost and provide for the gradual payment of the principal.

The building of a sewer or giving aid in the way of tile to sewers which are not in accordance with the plan should be discontinued. If carefully entered into we think that considerable work could be provided for citizens who are much of the time idle. The interest of the resident laborer should be carefully considered in any such works.

We also think that all new side walks should be of a permanent character. The construction of the road ways is a difficult problem and we would advise the asking of the Ontario Commissioner, Mr. Campbell, to visit this town at an early date. This, is a matter the surrounding country is equally interested in and doubtless the councils of the immediate townships would join us in such invitation. We are equally interested in the roads of the country as we are in all things that help to make the farmer prosperous. The town and country are mutually dependant and what prospers one is benencial to the other.

A person accepting the position of councillor is in duty bound to give careful consideration to the affairs of the municipality, and not feel as soon as he is elected that his troubles are over until the next election.

The practice of leaving the duties of the different committees chiefly to the chairman is pernicious. It lessens the interest of the members of the committee and places too much upon the chairman. We would suggest the making each member of a committee responsible for some of the duties. For instance the three members of the street committee could have charge of the side walks, sewers and roadways respectively.

We detect symptoms of unusual enthusiasm in this present council and as nearly every member has had extensive experience in municipal affairs, we have confidence it will be noted for good judgment and carefulness.

The thanks of the council was tendered to Mayor Ward for his excellent address, and the good advice contained therein

Councillor Aylsworth thought it was the best address that had ever been delivered by an incumbent of the Mayor's chair. It outlined the work for the year. It was pleasing and satisfactory and he was pleased to see that the council endorsed it.

Mr. Symington, who was present was called upon for a speech, but after complimenting the council on the efficient and promising Mayor they had to preside over them he retired with a graceful allusion to the council.

The Mayor thanked the council for their kindly expression.

The By-law for the appointment of auditors was next taken up. The Mayor appointed W. J. Black as his auditor and the council proceeded to ballot for the second auditor. The ballot resulted as follows:..R. L. Henry 9, A F. Holmes 1, Jno. T. Grange 1, A. E. Paul 1. R. L. Henry was declared elected, and the salary placed at $15 each.

On motion of Couns. Miller and Alexander the following committee was appointed to strike the standing committees for the year and repart at the evening session; Mayor Ward, Reeve Leonard, Couns. Aylsworth Carson and Lowry.

THE Globe points out that "the unsatisfactory feature of the Winnipeg prosecutions is that only the tools and not the real culprits can be reached." The satisfactory feature, however, is that the old machine is badly damaged.

GUS Harriman, the card shark, who was imported from Winnipeg to do duty as deputy returning officer in the Macdonald election in Manitoba in June last, is something of a character. He is noted as the most clever card manipulator in Western Canada and has served a term in gaol for gambling. He is now under arrest for stuffing ballot boxes and it is to be hoped cold justice will be meted out to him and all others guilty of a like offence.

MAYOR Ward's inaugural address to to the town council outlines several contemplated changes and improvements which should command the attention and sober reflection of our citizens. Any reform that has for its object the safe guarding of the public health should be carefully considered. The movement to take over the Water Works and institute a general sewerage system, foreshadowed in the Mayor's address, is one that has been obtruding itself on public attention for some time past. A few months ago an agitation was started against the use the drains were being subjected to, in direct contravention of the by-law made and provided. The council took the matter up at the time and instructed the Sanitary Inspector to proceed against those parties who were using the drains for water closet purposes. Here the matter dropped, no further action being taken. There is no doubt that the present system is a grave menace to the public health and that a general sewerage system is an urgent necessity. It is a change that has got to come sooner or latter and we believe the town is as well prepared

A Belleville philosopher writes to the Ontario against the practice of electing educated men to the legislatures and the municipal councils. Large property holders and highly educated men, says this modern Junius, have not only been the ruin of our municipal Governments but the Dominion as well. From a cursory glance at his letter we are inclined to the opinion that if his views were accepted education would not stand as a bar to his advancement.

In the matter of providing "rest for de weary" the city of Kingston has left its rival, Belleville, miles in the rear. Spr'n; mattrasses of the latest improved style have been provided by the council for the use of tramps who may have occasion to spend an evening in that city. We hope that such enterprise will be rewarded and that the 900 or so odd tramps who sought shelter in the station house here last year will be induced by the prospect of a night on a bang-up mattress to press on to Kingston.

Everybody has heard of a "Dutch drink," but a witness at the London election trial puzzled the learned counsel, Mr. Osler, by informing him that he had had a "Joe Smith." It appears that "Joe Smith" was an individual who contracted a habit of drinking all by his lonesome. Thus the name of "Joe Smith" will be handed down to posterity alongside of that of the immortal "John Collins."

A complication has arisen in Brantford over the fact that the modelites gave their respected teacher, Principal Wilkison, a little present a few days ago. The Minister of Education got wind of the affair, and, as it is strictly against model school regulations, the certificates of all the modelites have been withheld pending inquiries. Miss Cora Wheeland, the only pupil who did not take part in the presentation, has received her certificate. The affair has been an annual one, the same as in many other towns, and no attention has been paid to it by the department until now.—Ex.

The black stuff found in Algoma, says an exchange, which some thought was coal, but which the scientists say is not coal but anthraxolite, has been tested in Toronto, and burns like coal and gives out heat like coal. The question now is, is their enough of it to repay the expense of getting it out. The country will not care what it is called if it warms.

A writer who evidently knows what he is talking about says: There is some discussion here and there concerning the possibility of a deadlock in the new county councils by the election of an equal number of members of opposite political parties, and the question is often asked if the election of a warden by one party or the other would give an advantage. It may be said that it would give no advantage. Under the municipal law it is provided that a Chairman or presiding officer of any Council shall have the same right to vote as any other member, and no greater. He has no double or casting vote in the event of a tie, and a question on which there is a tie, must, according to the statute, be decided in the negative.

WE write it 1897—some people are still using the 6.

IT is thought that the Dominion Parliament will meet about the middle of March.

IN the London election they used beer but in Winnipeg whole breweries were pressed into service.

CANADA has no use for the Patriotic Vigilance Committee. There is no room here for demagogues.

THE indiscriminate distribution of five-dollar-bills was a greater factor in carrying Winnipeg than Hugh John's nose.

IN the Winnipeg election two breweries and three hotels dispensed free drinks to all who declared themselves supporters of Hugh John Macdonald.

THREE card monte and thimble rigging is an honorable and gentlemanly game compared to the work of the Conservative bosses in Winnipeg and Macdonald.

THERE are at present seven vacant seats in the Dominion House of Commons. All were held at the last session by Conservatives who have been unseated for corrupt practices by agents.

WITH gamblers and card sharpers acting as deputy-returning officers, beer flowing like water, and five dollar bills for the asking, the wonder is that the Liberals of Manitoba succeeded in returning even one member.

THE old "Christmas in Canada" cuts in the British Magazines are hardly appropriate. It is hard to part with old friends, no doubt, and those famous snow pictures have been doing duty for a long time, but really they don't fit the situation and we very much fear, if they wish to be fair to this budding young country, the enterprising British publishers will have to invest in a new set of chromos.

We believe the town is as well prepared to proceed with the work this year as it will be in a few years hence. That as a result of tardiness in remedying these defects an epidemic of fever or something of that sort were to break out the people would perceive when too late, the folly of temporizing with a matter of this kind, and if the present state of affairs is allowed to continue a visitation of the character alluded to is not at all improbable. The drains and water courses of this town were never intended for use as sewers, and anyone who has given the subject any attention at all can easily see that if they are used for that purpose it must inevitably lead to trouble. The sooner a general sewerage system is introduced the better.

A day or two ago Messrs. Lou Williams and Lou Fitzone with Miss Williams of Big Island were anxious to go to Belleville. They feared that the ice on the bay would not carry a horse and rig, so they decided to skate over. The two young men skated and towed a handsled on which were Miss Williams and a quite heavy load of poultry and dairy produce. They made the distance of ten miles in 36 minutes.—Picton Times.

A CHEERING TRUTH.

Thousands Prove The Statement.

That Paine's Celery Compound Makes People Feel Young Again.

A Cured Man Says: "Feel Just as Bright as a Boy."

The Right Medicine For Every Ailing Man and Woman.

All the combined powers of earth cannot stem the tide of truth that sweeps over this Canada of ours in regard to the curing and life-giving virtues of Paine's Celery Compound. Thousands of the best people back up the sensible, plain and unvarished statements about Paine's Celery Compound published from time to to time. The cured thousands send such convincing letters of testimony that the most hardened sceptics are forced to admit that they are founded on the rock of truth and honesty.

The following letter from Mr. A. R. McGruer, Dixon's Corners, Ont., assures you, though your case may be desperate and death very nigh, and though doctors fail and other medicines prove unavailing for your relief, that Paine's Celery Compound will do more for you than you can justly realize or hope for. Mr. McGruer says:

"Some time ago my condition of health was alarming and I suffered very much. I was laid up three days out of every week; and I said to my friends that it would be better, if it was the Lord's will, that I should be called away. Three of the best doctors attended me, but could not relieve me in any way. It was then I was advised to use Paine's Celery Compound, which brought relief at once. After using this great remedy I find myself a new man, and feel just as bright as a boy of eighteen years. I think it is the greatest medicine in the world, and would strongly recommend it to all who suffer.

Constipation Cured. GENTS,—I was in very poor health for over four years; the doctor said it was constipation. Not wanting to spend too much cash I got three bottles of B. B. B. and took it regularly. I can certify that I am now in the very best of health and feel very grateful to B.B.B.

It is needless to state that it was Johnny's bachelor uncle who made the remark. No man with experience in grocery bills would have made such an error.—Indianapolis Journal.

WORK SPOILED.

Did Not Get the Best Kind.

Why labor in vain? Why do you try to dye cotton or mixed goods with common dyes that the makers prepared for all wool goods?

Well you are not altogether to blame; the dealer who sold you the dye, and who told you it was good for either cotton or wool, is the one who is directly responsible for your loss and failure. He sold you worthless dyes because they gave him a large return of profit.

If you had bought the Diamond Dyes made specially for Cotton and Mixed Goods your work would have been well and truly done. These special cotton colors of the Diamond Dyes are the latest discoveries of the best chemists of the world, and are far superior to all other dyes for the coloring of cotton goods.

Fast Diamond Dyes for Cotton are quite fast to light, and if you use them your carpets and rugs will be as bright after years of wear as the most expensive carpets you can buy. For dyeing Cotton or Mixed Goods, ask for Fast Diamond Dyes for Cotton; take no others.

REGISTERING THE LAYERS.

A Method by Which the Prolific Egg Hens May Be Known.

No small part of the loss in poultry culture comes from rearing and feeding for two years or more, it may be, a lot of hens that are indifferent layers. As poultry culture is ordinarily conducted, the owner of a flock rarely knows whether he has any really prolific layers, or any that are exceedingly poor. He has no time to watch his flock during the day, and can only see at the end of the day how many eggs have been laid by a given number of hens. In such a case the poor hens are supported by the good layers. How much more profitable would be a flock having the inferior layers all weeded out!

This weeding out must be done automatically, in most flocks, if it is to be done at all. There have been reports from time to time of devices for registering each hen as she lays; but, so far as the writer knows, no description has ever been given of the way these self-registering nests are made.

A very simple contrivance of this sort is shown in the two cuts given herewith. Fig. 1 shows the nest, which is a grocery box with an opening at either side. From one end extend two arms, at the end of which is placed a weight. The box is now to be placed between two partitions, in each of which is an opening, as shown in Fig. 2, one higher than the other. The nest is inserted between the two partitions, and pivoted on the arms, as shown in Fig. 1. When in place, the nest is held by the weight so that an opening in one side is opposite the higher opening in one of the partitions. A hen can now enter the nest through the openings in partition and nest that coincide. Her weight carries the nest down so that the opening in the opposite side is opposite the opening in the second partition, through which the

He is free'd from all sorrow and pain;
To remove him from earth God thought best.
Our loss is his infinite gain.

God has taken one more of his flock,
His name in His book was enrolled,
His feet that were found on the rock
Are placed in that city of gold.

He has gone where loved ones never die,
Just acrost on that ever green shore;
We shall join him again bye and bye
Where partings and tears are no more.

A companion and daughters are left
In sorrow and sadness of heart,
Of a husband and father bereft
Their Saviour thought best they should part.

The one that is gone we will miss,
For our interest he often has planned.
We have took from his lips our last kiss
And clasped for the last time his hand.

I think on the day we were wed
All my joys and my sorrows he shared,
But now he has left me and fled
To that mansion his Saviour prepared.

Dear Father, bound close to our hearts,
As the ivy that clings to the oak,
But Jesus thought best we should part,
The cord that once bound us is broke.

As we stood by the side of his casket
And gazed on his marble white brow,
Wish him back, no we never could ask it,
For he is far happier now.

How lonely our dwelling will be,
Now his place at the table is bare,
His picture is all we can see—
In our home now is one vacant chair.

It was hard to bid father good bye
And bury him out of our sight,
God took him, we cannot tell why,
But know what He does must be right.

We listen, but listen in vain,
For the sound of his step at the door,
We never can meet him again
Till we join him on Canaan's shore.

Over there we have now one more tie
To draw us from this world of care,
May we all meet again bye and bye
In the home of the blessed over there.

My daughters you will not forget,
When I am laid under the sod,
Though lonely and sad, do not fret,
The orphan's proctector is God.

That promise has often consoled
When fair friends have been borne from our door,
Mong'st that blood washed throng to behold
Our loved ones when life's toil is o'er.

One more that was dear to my heart,
That spent with me happy long years
Has been called by the Lord to depart,
And dwell where there is no more tears.

I wish not to murmur or fret
Though great is the loss I sustain,
Though severed awhile, I shall not forget
That I shall see William again.

How lonely, and yet not alone,
For his Saviour too, is my friend,
And doth he not care for his own,
The Comforter promised to send.

The dearest friends here will soon sever
The thought often causes much pain
Friends dwelling up there dwell forever
And will not be parted again.

His work for the Master was done,
He was ready when called on to go;
A crown of bright glory he's won
And a robe that is white as the snow.

In the house of the Lord he is missed,
For when there was work to be done:
When able, was there to assist,
Our hearts, by his kindness, had won.

The promise of God he could claim,
As Thy day is, shall Thy strength be:
We oft heard him praise that dear name
Now His face he'll permitted to see.

His voice we shall hear it no more
As we sit in the house of the Lord,
He has passed on a little before
For his labour has got his reward.

Though sorely afflicted and tried
God's promise and arm did sustain,
His presence did with him abide
He seldom was heard to complain.

In ninety-six I was bereft
Of one whom I had loved so well,
Maren twenty first dear William left
God took him home with him to dwell.

"That ain't the way you use ter talk, 'Mandy."

"I know it. But I've changed my way o' thinkin' a hull lot in the last week. I don't say ez I kin see through all these problems, but I ain't ez goin' ter shirk tryin' hereafter."

"What converted ye?"

"That talk you an' Lem Harkins had last night convinced me."

"Why, we wa'n't neither of us talkin' 'bout anythin' except the financial question. I don't see how ye kin side weth Lem Harkins."

"I don't side weth Lem Harkins. An' I don't side weth you, neither. We oft do bear a heavy yoke—
What comfort 'tis—what sweet delight—
To light my pipe and smoke—and smoke.

Who hate the nation's president,
Gesticulate and rant and croak;
I waste no words in argument,
But light my pipe and smoke—and smoke.

When Stupid comes to visit me,
And is as dull as dull can be,
Successfully my yawns to cloak,
That he may not my absence see,
I light my pipe and smoke—and smoke.

When icy is the outdoor air,
Then forth I draw my easy chair,
And properly the fire stoke,
Then, yielding to the comfort rare,
I light my pipe and smoke—and smoke.

When snug I'm in my ingle-nook,
No thoughts of trouble do I brook.
I watch the brightly burning coke
Or lose myself in some rare book,
And puff—and puff—and puff—and smoke—and smoke.

A PROVIDENTIAL RESCUE

FROM A LIFE BURDENED WITH PAIN AND SUFFERING.

Languor, Severe Headaches and Pains in the Region of the Kidneys Made the Life of Mrs. McCause Miserable — Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Cured after other Medicines Failed

From the Gravenhurst Banner.

Poor health is an affliction that is dreaded by every one, and the first sign of approaching disease is usually met with an attempt on the part of the patient to check and kill it. Frequently, however, even the most skilled physicians fail, and the sufferer endures a weary round of agony such as those who are in the full enjoyment of health can have no conception of. But when at last a medicine is found that will cure its worth cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. It is without price. Such is the opinion of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McCauce, of Ashdown, Ont. Mr. McCauce tells the story of his wife's illness and cure as follows:—"For three or four years past my wife had been constantly failing in health. The first symptoms of her trouble were languor and loss of appetite, accompanied by bearing down pains and headache, which affected her periodically. As time grew on she was attacked with pains in the region of her kidneys that became almost unbearable owing to their severity. Home remedies and different medicines were tried with no good results. Last winter she grew so weak and helpless that I was obliged to seek medical aid for her, and accordingly sent her out to Barrie, where she received the best medical attention, the result of which was only slightly beneficial. On her return, owing no doubt to the tediousness of the journey, she suffered from a relapse and her trouble came back in a form more aggravated then before. I noticed in a paper which I was reading one day a testimonial from one who had been cured of a similar trouble, and although knowing that other remedies had failed in my poor suffering wife's case, there was yet a ray of hope. I therefore procured a few boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and on my return home administered the first dose to my wife. It is perhaps needless to relate that before the first supply was exhausted she found great relief. My wife now commenced to enjoy a buoyancy of spirits and kept on taking the Pink Pills with increasing good results. By the time she had used six boxes her condition had so improved that her neighbors were almost prepared to believe the evidence of their own eyes when seeing the change in her appearance. Before taking the pills it was a severe task even to dress herself, much less to do any housework, while now, although not having used any of the pills for more than a couple of months, she attends to all her household duties without the slightest inconvenience. Taking all things into consideration, I feel it a duty I owe to other sufferers to recommend these little pink messengers of health which stood between my well nigh distracted wife and the jaws of a lingering but certain death."

The experience of years has proved that there is absolutely no disease due to a vitiated condition of the blood or shattered nerves that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will not promptly cure, and those who are suffering from such troubles would avoid much misery and save money by promptly resorting to this treatment. Get the genuine Pink Pills every time and do not be persuaded to take an imitation or some other remedy from a dealer who for the sake of the extra profit to himself, may say is 'just as good.' Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure when other medicines fail.

second partition, through which the hen emerges from the nest when her egg is laid, thus coming out into another pen. In reality, two full partitions are not needed, the second partition coming up from the floor a few inches above the opening, and that only for the length of the box or nest.

The nest must then, of course, have a cover, which may be hinged and the eggs thus gathered. The weight attached to the arms must be just heavy enough to bring the nest—with more or less eggs in it—back to its natural position at the upper opening. The longer the arms, the less inclined will be the floor of the nest, as it sinks under the weight of the hen. Let the bottom of the nest strike a little spiral spring as it comes to rest, if you would avoid even a slight jar.

Two rooms are not needed for using such a nest. One can fence off with wire netting a corner of the hen house, making only enough of the partition of boards to hold the nest on its pivot, and to afford an opening into it. The hens as they lay will come out into this enclosure, where they can be occupied with scratching for grain in litter or the enclosure may open out into a yard, from which the hens can be released at night, after a record has been made of the day's layers.

To make this an easy matter the hens must be marked in some way so that they can be instantly distinguished and recorded. Perhaps the easiest way to do this is to paint a number on the backs of the hens, using a dark paint for white, or light-colored hens, and a light-colored paint for dark hens. With this method in operation the drones in the flock can soon be culled out and sent to the frying pan or market, when the net profits from the flock will very materially increase.

But this is not the whole of the story. By following such a plan as I have outlined, one will be able to pick out the three or four really wonderful layers which many flocks will be found to contain, and to save the eggs from thes hens for hatching. If this practice is followed year after year, the average laying quality of the whole flock will be constantly growing higher.

Where a large business is made of producing eggs for market, this course is of special value, because in the end it will mean a greatly increased product. But even where only a small flock is kept, there is a satisfaction in weeding out the poor and in keeping only the best, even though the matter of profit may not be of vital concern.—Webb Donnell, in Country Gentleman.

Horse Phrenology.

Every horse carries an index to his temper and intelligence in his face. The teachable, tractable animal is broad and flat between the eyes; the bony ridge of his face dishes slightly from the point where the face narrows toward the nostrils. His ears are well set, sensitive and far apart, with a well-defined ridge of bone extending across the top of the head between them. Always feel for this ridge in judging a horse. The eye should be large, clear and bright, with a prominent ridge of bone along the inner or upper edge of the socket.

Don't daily with rheumatism. Purify your blood and cure it at once by taking a course of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Tobacco Heart Much heart and nerve weakness is caused by undue use of tea, coffee, or tobacco; palpitation, nervousness, irritability, excitability, lack of confidence, etc., are sure symptoms. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills bring ready relief, by steadying the nerve and regulating the heart. They are a true heart and nerve tonic.

SOCIETY'S LATEST.

THOUGHT PHOTOGRAPHY HAS BECOME THE SCIENTIFIC FAD.

The Results of Experiments of Dr. Baraduc, as Found in His Report to the Academy of Medicine, the Basis—What They Are.

A new fad has seized upon society. Thought photography clubs have been formed with surprising and sometimes startling results. By fixing the gaze upon an undeveloped photographic plate or even holding these plates in the hands, figures of persons and forms of a very extraordinary character have been produced when these plates were developed. The facts in the matter are well substantiated.

This is far and away more interesting than palmistry and crystal-gazing. A brilliant society woman who is up to date in everything, including the latest scientific discoveries, reflected that if Dr. Baraduc, the Parisian electro-therapeutist, could obtain these pictures and astonish the French Academy of Medicine with them, she ought to be able to do the same, since the method was simplicity itself, and the cost not worth considering, nothing more being necessary than a box of plates and from two to a dozen people who were capable of concentrating their thoughts on a given person or subject for a few minutes.

Inviting a few trusted friends, a circle was formed and a box containing four unopened plates placed in the center. The results were astonishing when the plates were developed. She was an amateur photographer herself and did the developing. Luminous pictures made their appearance. On the top plate no distinct form was visible, bzut in the shadowy outlines various gures and faces could be discerned by a lively imagination. On the next plate, however, there was a well-defined finger shape, across which lay a light figure that might be held to resemble a female. But the really startling result was the pictures which developed themselves on the two middle plates. On these were distinct faces, recognized by members of the circle as perfect pictures of living friends they had held

We hear a great deal about purifying the blood. The way to purify it is to enrich it. Blood is not a simple fluid like water. It is made up of minute bodies and when these are deficient, the blood lacks the life-giving principle. Scott's Emulsion is not a mere blood purifier. It actually increases the number of the red corpuscles in the blood and changes unhealthy action into health.

If you want to learn more of it we have a book, which tells the story in simple words.

"Why don't women buy their hats as men do? Now, there's a derby that only cost me a couple of dollars and I will wear it for two seasons," and Chauncey Smith took off a neat hat and handed it to his wife.

"That is your privilege," she responded "do you wish me to wear a hat like yours? They are all the style."

"No; I mean a feminine affair with lace and ribbons. Something that compares in price with mine. You let your milliners swamp you with their ideas and expenditures. Be original and make your own hats and buy other things with the money saved."

"I am willing to try," said his wife pleasantly.

"That's right, Lottie. You know a man doesn't know anything about a woman's hat. It is the face under the hat that appeals to us,' and, lighting a cigar he swaggered off.

R. G. CARTER, Gen. Pass. Agent. G. A. BROWNE, Gen. Manager. H. B. SHERWOOD, Secretary.

pictures of living friends they had held in their thoughts. In one case the photograph was that of a brother who had been lost at sea. All the plates had pictures, but some were positives and others were negatives. Two had to be transformed to a lantern-slide before they could be printed from.

The thing was a success, and now society has a fad that it will not tire of for some time to come.

How is this photography accomplished? Dr. Baraduc's explanation is that every human being has the power of expressing conscious or unconscious thought exteriorly. He believes that a mysterious, impalpable force resides in and emanates from the human body. In the sphere formed about us by this vital emanation our thoughts create forms which the sensitive plate seizes upon and retains. The discovery of the Roentgen rays was a preparation for this statement. Dr. Baraduc has proved his statement in regard to the existence of this luminous radiation by his magnetometers and by photographs, over 300 of which he reproduced in his report read before the Academy of Medicine, "The Photography of Thought." The society women must be well up in this knowledge and know that the magnetometers are small dials marked off with 360 degrees. Over the surface of each dial moves a fine needle as carefully balanced and as free as possible. The dial is protected from all exterior influences by a glass globe. Not a breath of air can move the hands. These, moreover, are of especially prepared copper and are not subject to magnetism.

The investigator points both hands toward the magnetometers and watches what follows. In about two minutes, if he or she is of normal temperature, he sees the needle nearest his left hand move away from zero so far as degree 5. It is repelled. At the same time the needle nearest the right hand is attracted 15 degrees. It moves toward the fingers of the right hand. The existence of the vital force is next demonstrated in a more definite manner. All light is excluded from the parlor or laboratory, and a photographic plate is interposed between the hands and the magnetometers. Under these conditions the nitrate of silver of the plate is incapable, according to all previous experience, of receiving any impression except by actually touching some substance. It would remain intact for an indefinite period. But here Dr. Baraduc's vital force comes into play. When the plates are developed in a bath by the members of the thought-photography club, it is found that the one which was nearest the left hand has received one impression and that which was nearest the right another. It, therefore, seems that the vital force has not only penetrated the glass, but is luminous.

The photograph proves it, and the skeptical may, with the greatest ease, make tests for themselves.

Dr. Baraduc calls the vital force given out on the left side the "expir" and that attracted on the right side the "aspir."

The experiment has been repeated 300 times, and in every case the photographic plate has shown an impression.

The members of the club are instructed that it is to be noted that while the left side exerts only five degrees of force, the right absorbs fifteen. There remains a difference of ten degrees accumulated in the system. This, according to Dr. Baraduc, is psychic force, which can be exerted on external objects by the will.

This brings us to the most important part of the experiments. The magnetometers are taken away and a society man places himself in front of a fresh photographic plate. He extends his hands in the direction of the plate and is requested to think of some one particular thing with all the energy and concentration of mind of which he is capable.

At the end of a period which varies from two minutes to two hours the plate is impressed by a sort of luminous cloud, in which the outlines of certain objects can be discerned. These vary in distinctness, according to the character of the thinker, and can only be expected to appear when he has fixed his mind on some concrete and clearly defined subject.

The kind of thought photograph most easy to produce is a likeness of called Chauncey out on the avenue. He saw some pretty girls in Gainsborough hats, who were friends of his wife. They were pretty, but he knew they had always been outflanked by Little and it gave him a pleasant thrill of satisfaction. Then he saw a dowdy-looking girl approaching, and he looked at her with a mental shock.

"Why will women get themselves up in such a frightful shape? I daresay that poor thing would be passably good-looking if she were stylishly dressed. Good heavens! Lottie?"

"I made it myself," said Lottie, as she shot past him, leaving him the picture of mortification and dismay.

"You see," she explained at supper, that evening, "millinery is a profession I never learned, and I haven't millinery fingers naturally, as a very few women have. But what is wrong with my hat?

"It's simply frightful, that's all."

"I made it for a song."

"I should think it came nearer being a nightmare."

"So do I," said his wife decidedly. "A milliner studies the features of her customers and makes hats to suit them and the effect is harmonious. My effort made a fright of me, and I can never improve. Making hats isn't my forte."

"Have one made to-morrow and send the bill to me. I hope you didn't see any of our friends on the avenue."

"Oh," said Lottie, demurely, "none of them recognized me in that hat."

Not on Her List.

He was no sooner seated in the cosy parlor than she took the initiative.

"Since you proposed to me last week I have given the matter a great deal of thought, Mr. Chumpley."

"Mr. Chumpley? Why, you called me Bertie, for ages."

"That's neither here nor there. I have concluded that I must decline the great honr you have proffered me."

"Ah! Certainly. But you must pardon me for not understanding just what you refer to. I have so much to think of in a social way, you know."

"But you must recall the last conversation you had with me."

"Deuced stupid of me, Mamie, but it has slipped my memory. Something about the horse show?"

"Never mind, Mr. Chumpley. Don't incur the risk of overtaxing your mind in trying to recall our little talk."

"So sorry! But a fellow will forget some things. Must do it, you know, if you're in the whirl. Can't you just give me a hint?"

"It is of no consequence at all, sir. I only have a vague recollection of the conversation myself. But I'm not feeling well, Mr. Chumpley, and must ask you to excuse me for the evening."

"Too bad! And you look in brilliant health. Only temporary indisposition, of course. But I'll not detain you. I'm going straight home and cudgel my brain till I bring back that talk."

"Do nothing of the kind. I never want to hear of it again."

When he was gone she acknowledged to herself that there was much more to him than she had suspected and that he had decidedly given her the worst of their little sparring match.

Chumpley walked down the street chuckling and congratulating himself. She always boasted gleefully of the men whom she had refused, but he had no fear that she would add him to the list.

His Rejoinder.

A WOMAN BEAUTIFUL.

SHE SUBMITS TO SCOURGING TO ATTAIN THIS DESIRED RESULT.

The Tools With Which It Is Done and the Modus Operandi—The Effects in Detail in a Progressive Sort of Way—What is Accomplished.

They literally beat women in some of the continental cities now—beat them with rattans. And the women submit to it voluntarily. It's the new muscle-beating fad—a fad by which women who are passee, who have become physically played out by late nights and bad food and fast living generally may be rejuvenated, rehabilitated, with color in their pale cheeks and elasticity in their step.

SCOURGING A WOMAN WITH RATTANS

It has just reached this country and the strictly up-to-date society woman is taking her daily muscle beating religiously.

In muscle beating a woman has to go through about the same treatment as criminals of old did in the days when the knout was used.

The patient is undressed and laid face downward on a couch. Then the beating begins. An attendant is armed with an implement consisting of a rubber ball attached to a flexible rattan or whalebone handle, which bends with the force of the blow, and has the elasticity of a coach whip.

With this instrument of torture the beater first brings down the rubber ball on the thick and fleshy muscles of the back. These being the most important muscles treated by the new process, the whipping goes on with enthusiasm until the beater is tired and the beaten ready to offer a bribe for a cessation of treatment.

Leaving for awhile the shoulder muscles, the beater then attacks the lower anatomy of the patient, taking the muscles around the waist and beating a tattoo from side to side, until the red blood is forced to the surface and sent surging through the veins.

Then the hips come in for punishment. The tune of the rubber balls is played with renewed force, for here the blows can be administered as heavily as is compatible with the feelings of the patient, without any fear of the punishment being dangerous. Having hammered the patient's hip muscles into a state of abject submission the attendant then travels along to the thighs and calves, administering such a flagellation with the two light weapons as only confirmed fadd'sts would be willing to submit to.

Byt this time the muscles of the back have recovered their wonted composure. Having beaten the jaded muscles of the back into life and vigor again, the woman under treatment is then placed on her back, and the muscles of the chest and stomach come in for a rain of blows from the merciless rubber balls.

When the beating is done by an accomplished hand it produces the most beneficial and pleasant results. Ordinary massage treatment is not in it with the drumstick method of muscle beating. There is as much difference between the benefits produced as between those that follow genuine gymnastic exercise and ordinary hand massage.

The impurities that have clogged the system and rendered the patient lan-

Their names are in the paper every day. In the obituary column. The names of men killed by neglect of their health combined with overwork. They should serve as a warning to others who are fast following in their footsteps. No man can stand the strain of modern business competition who wilfully neglects his health. It is not good policy to overwork, but the man who looks after his health can stand a great deal of it. The man who neglects his health is soon unfitted for work. When a man's digestion is disordered and his bowels are irregular, his blood becomes impure and the body is badly nourished. The victim of these conditions suffers from brain fag, nervous prostration, and debility, and eventually falls a victim to consumption.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery corrects the digestion, invigorates the liver, improves the appetite and regulates the bowels. It is the best blood-purifier, blood-maker, flesh-builder, and nerve tonic. It makes a man well, strong, clear-headed and fit for business. It enables him to stand a reasonable amount of overwork. All good druggists sell it. There's nothing "just as good."

Chas. Faulhaber, of Brownlee, Cherry Co., Neb., writes: "I have used Dr. Pierce's medicines, especially the 'Golden Medical Discovery' with much benefit. Some time ago I was troubled with great distress in my arms and hands. It got so bad I could not sleep at night. I thought it was the muscles of my arms that caused the trouble. I began taking the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' Soon I felt a decided improvement, and before I had taken the second bottle the aching was all gone, and it has not returned. I have a copy of your 'Common Sense Medical Adviser' and would not do without it for any money."

Knowing how to take care of health is half the battle against illness. Dr. Pierce's great book, "Common Sense Medical Adviser" is the educator of the age. This book reached a sale of 680,000 copies at $1.50 each. Within its 1,008 pages is compressed the best that Dr. Pierce has gathered by study and practice in thirty years. It is illustrated with over 300 drawings, some of them colored. Its 90 pages addressed exclusively to women are worth the original price of the book. A new edition in paper covers is now ready for free distribution. By sending 21 cents in one-cent stamps, to pay for customs and mailing, you will receive this great book. For cloth binding, send 50 stamps. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

Not That Kind of Ties.

She Was Ironical.

"How much better it is," remarked Mr. Laizalong, "to own a house than to rent one."

"I suppose it's better in some ways," his wife answered.

"Why, there isn't the slightest doubt of it. Whenever your house gets out of repair you don't have to go down on your knees to get the landlord to fix it."

"I suppose there is a good deal of comfort in that. If you own the house yourself, you don't feel that there's anybody else responsible, and you can go ahead and let things get out of repair and stay that way as long as you feel like it, and never worry a bit." Washington Star.

Something to Lick.

"I have, sire."

"I suppose Weyler is glad those stamps have been issued."

"May I inquire why, your excellency?"

"Well, he can lick them, you know."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

An Unchanged Opinion.

"You may call Mr. Biggies egotistic and conceited if you choose," she said, "but there's one trait I admire in him. He always gives his wife credit for possessing excellent judgment. I don't think that's very egotistical."

"Yes, it is," her husband replied. "He does that because she selected him when she married."

Desperate Wager.

"If you haven't been takin' a bath, I'll eat my hat," declared Mr. Weary Watkins.

"Guess I'll have to own up," assented Mr. Dismal Dawson.

"What d'ye mean by it?"

"Election bet; that's all."—Indianapolis Journal.

guid and half-lifeless are beaten into action and forced along to where they can be thrown off. The flabby and almost helpless muscles respond to the energetic hammering of the rubber balls and become hard and useful once more. The blood, the great nourishing factor in the human system, is beaten into activity where it has been sluggish, and the whole system is revived.

Sufferers from feeble muscular power who have tried the new muscle beating fad are unanimous in declaring it to be superior to the old massage treatment in every way, and it is probable that the system of hand massage will soon give place to the flagellating idea.

The implements used are not all made alike. Some have two and three balls attached to the flexible rod, and these balls may be of any size that the patient prefers.

Another flagellating implement consists of a number of hollow rubber tubes attached to a handle, making an implement like a whitewash brush. The treatment with this implement is much severer than with the drumstick muscle beater, as the action is more like a cat-o'-nine-tails thrashing than a gentle hammering.

& Co., 72 Bay street, Toronto. His many years of experience have acquainted him with almost every person in the entire trade. To many of his friends it has been known that he has suffered during very severe illness the past year, and in regard to the same Mr. Johnston writes the following letter :—

TORONTO, Dec. 3, 1896.

MESSRS. T. MILBURN & CO.:

DEAR SIRS,—For over ten months I suffered from dropsy, caused by kidney trouble which followed an attack of la grippe. The symptoms rapidly became serious and medical aid was called in. Among others who were consulted were Dr. Wallace, Dr. Norman Allen, Dr. Weir and Dr. Glass, all of this city, and I can truly state that they made every effort that medical skill could provide. Seven operations were performed within six months, during which time I visited at different periods for the purpose of these operations the following hospitals, viz: The Toronto General Hospital, St. Michael's Hospital and Grace Hospital. Although all that could be done for me was faithfully and skillfully performed, I received only temporary relief, the operations only serving to remove the enormous quantities of water which constantly accumulated. As a matter of fact, 17 gallons of water were removed during the last two operations. After the last operation I was given up to die and was given only six to twelve days to live.

In addition to the best medical skill which money could procure, I used all kinds of patent medicines which promised relief, but without effect. All the family remedies suggested, such as Milkweed Tea, Pumpkin Seed Tea, Mullein Leaf Tea, Spanish Onion Tea, Sweet Nitre and Buchu, etc., were faithfully tried but gave not the slightest relief, so that I had lost all hope, when I was persuaded to try Doan's Kidney Pills, together with Laxa Liver Pills. To my surprise I received almost immediate relief. At this time I was unable to lie down and for three and a half months previously was forced to sleep in a chair. My waist measure was then 49 inches; it is now 33 inches since the wonderful cure made by these pills.

the operations I was reduced to 130. I weigh now 160. By carefully watching the action of Doan's Pills and Laxa Liver Pills I am positive that to them alone is due the wonderful cure which has taken place in my case.

I am a printer by trade and have held positions in the offices of The Globe, Mail, Methodist Book Room, etc., as well as in Ohio and Detroit, Mich., and have been an employing printer since 1877.

Although it may seem incredible, every word I have stated is the truth, and I am prepared to back it by the evidence of hundreds of citizens and friends who knew me before I was sick and afterwards, while I was near death's door, and who now, to their surprise, see me restored to complete health by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills, assisted by Laxa Liver Pills. I shall be glad to answer inquiries from sufferers from kidney or liver troubles at any time, and refer to the following gentlemen who have knowledge of the facts, and can verify every word I say. Many of these gentlemen knew me before my sickness, during my terrible sufferings, and since I was restored to health. NEW PHOTOGRAPHY.

A Method Dispensing With Chemicals and the Dark Room.

From Paris, the origin of so many art sensations, comes the news of an entirely new or novel method of photograaphy in which chemicals and the dark room are dispensed with and the whole process greatly simplified. Artigue, the noted Parisian artist, is the patentee of the process. The printing paper he uses is covered with a gelatinuous substance, which has the property of becoming indissoluble if exposed to light in proportion to the amount of light which is allowed to act upon it. The sensitized sheet is placed in a printing frame under the negative in the usual way, the exposure taking place under artificial light and for a few seconds only. The operator has no way of telling when the print has been sufficiently exposed, experience being the only guide, as the picture will not show until development.

The method of bringing out and finishing the picture is very curious as compared with the old methods. Two or three quarts of sawdust are mixed into a fluid mass with a sufficient quantity of warm water, maintaining the temperature at about eighty degrees Fahrenheit. The exposed print is first dipped into cold water to make it soft, and is then fastened by means of clamps to a plate of plain glass. A portion of the sawdust mixture is then poured over the print. The picture comes out slowly if the exposure has been properly made. If the picture appears too fast it is a sign that it has been over-exposed, and a cooler mixture must be quickly taken and poured over the picture to retard development and save it definitely. If the picture should come out too slow the opopsite process is observed, raising the temperature of the sawdust mixture as high as eighty-five degrees. When the print is strong and clear enough it is simply placed in cold water to wash off every trace of bichromate, and it may then be immediately mounted upon cardboard. These prints are of a mellow black color, and it is said will never fade or deteriorate. The greatest advantage in using this kind of paper for printing photographs is the fact that no chemicals of any description except the bichromate are used. And as paper sensitized with bichromate may be carried along and used for a long time, there is no necessity for carrying even that chemical; and the sawdust, of course, can be procured anywhere.

Mrs. Artemus Granger, a kindly and much respected lady died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Peter McPhereson, Camden township, on Thursday, aged 84 years. The funeral will take place from the church at Napanee Mills to the Napanee cemetery on Saturday.

A Novel Birthday Party.

A pretty and novel little birthday party was given by Miss Helen Herrington in honor of her seventh birthday to twenty-two of her little friends on Friday afternoon last. It was held in the Kindergarten class room and was one of the most pronounced and enjoyable successes of the season. The cakes and edibles provided were excellent and a constant revelation to the children. The girls were constantly running across dolls in their cakes, while the boys discovered marbles, etc. in theirs.

Methodist Church will be held at Newburgh on Monday Feb. 8th, 1897. The secretary of the bay of Quinte Conference Epworth League the Rev. C. W. Watch, Brighton, will be with us. Let me again remind each society of the necessity of appointing one to propose and to hand in an accurate report of the present state and the work done during past year. The report should include names, officials, statistics, departments organized, reading course in operation, numbers of convention etc. Do not forget the general Epworth League fund collection, send it or hand it to Rev. R. McCulloch before the convention. I have not had time this year to write to all personally whose names appear on the programme but I trust you will accept my explanation and fulfil your part or procure a good substitute. Let the junior societies send in reports, there was nothing more interesting at our convention last year than the junior reports. Yours sincerely, Parish of Bath.

The Annual Sunday School entertainment came off in the town hall on Friday evening 8th, Jan. and was well patronized every seat being filled. A part of the programme was furnished by the children themselves, who gave a few recitations and two choruses which were nicely rendered. The rest of the evening was taken up by Mr. W. T. Hodge with his wonderful performances in magic and ventriloquism, aided by his very clever little son Herbert. Mr. Hodge is always received well here, but this time was liked better than ever, partly because of his new attraction, "The Marionette Theatre," which is a marvel in its way and most mirth-provoking, and partly because of the assistance Master Herbert afforded him, who though only 9 years old, is an expert already in bone-playing, ventriloquism and the magic art. The proceedings closed with the presentation of the gifts and prizes to the children, some sixty in all. The prize winners in the seven classes were as follows; 1st class, Alice McCaugherty; 2nd, class, Bertha Brunnie; 3rd, class, George Parks; 4th class, Earl Trimlett; 5th class, Lester McCaugherty; 6th class, Letta McCaugherty; 7th class, Bert Trimlett. From the above it will be seen that three children of Mr. A. McCaugherty earned the distinction of being at the head of their respective classes. In the number of marks Letta stands 1st, Lester 2nd, Bert. Trimlett 3rd.

IN THE REALMS OF SPORT.

A DECISIVE VICTORY.

The first of the league games for the Corby cup was the greatest kind of "pie" for the Napanee Hockey Club. On Friday evening our boys met the Deseronto aggregation at the Napanee Curling and Skating rink and worsted them to the tune of 13 goals to 0. It was an awful beating but the Deseronto boys took their defeat good naturedly and feel confident that with a little more practice and a few alterations in the personnel of the team, they will be able to make a better showing when they again cross sticks with Napanee. Shortly for the Corby Cup, Belleville defeated Picton by 12 goals to 1.

Belleville and Napanee will struggle for glory and the Corby Cup at the Napanee skating rink on Monday evening next. Considerable interest centres around this match as in all likelihood the possession of the cup lies between the above teams. We will be able to draw a line on the winner after Monday night.

Peterboro, last year's intermediate champions, were to play the Napanee hockey teamat the Napanee rink this evening, but late Thursday word was received that the team could not come. Therefore the Collegiate Institute will play the town

Death of an Old Resident.

One by one the old residents of this locality are dropping off, the latest addition to the ranks of those who have gone before being Mrs. Wm. R. Sills, who passed away at the residence of her son, Mr. E. R. Sills, 3rd con, Richmond, on Thursday at the ripe old age of 80 years and two months. Deceased was a daughter of the late Henry McCabe and was born in the township of North Fredericksburgh. Her husband preceeded her to the grave about 16 months ago. Deceased was much respected and esteemed for her many good qualities and died in the full hope of a glorious resurrection. She leaves three sons, Erastus R. on the homestead, Ibra B. and U. C. Sills, of Richmond, and one daughter Mrs. James Empey of Switzerville. Two sisters, Mrs. Smith, Hay Bay, and Mrs. Edgar, Camden East, also survive her. The funeral takes place to the Huffman cemetery on Saturday.

Lennox Farmers Institute Meetings

The meetings at Odessa on Jan, 7th, both in the afternoon and evening were well attended and highly successful. At the evening meeting there would be about 200 in attendance. F. Vandebogart, occupied the chair, and Col. McRae, of Guelph, and Nulton Everette, of Smith's Fall's, handled the subjects chosen for them in an able manner. Discussions followed, led by C. W. Neville and S. D. Clarke, which proved quite interesting and enjoyable. The Sillsvile meetings off the 8th inst. brought out a large crowd and passed off very successfully. The residents of Sillsville seem to be taking an active interest in Institute work, as they sent in a lot of new members this year. The meetings at Selby on the 9th were the most successful of the series. At the evening meeting there were about 250 present and had it not been held on a Saturday the attendance would have been much larger. The Selby instrumental quartette, led by Mr. McGuiness gave four excellent selections. Col. McRae and Mr. Everetts delivered interesting addresses, and Mr. J. J. Keator of the Rathbun Company's stock farms, gave a very practical and interesting address on dishorning with acids. A calf was dishorned in the presence of the audience thus affording the speaker every facility of illustrating his subject. Col. McRae was suddenly called home on Sunday owing to the death of his mother, an aged lady of 82 years. Mr. Herchmer Aylsworth, of Deseronto, took Mr. McRae's place at the Sydenham meetings and Mr Alex. Youvill, of Carleton Place will fill the remainder of the Colonel's engagement in this division.

Refree Frank McKeown, Belleville.

The superiority of the Napanee boys was apparent from the start. Their passing and combination work was excellent, and their shoots on goal accurate and well timed. The game was too one-sided to be interesting, although at times some heavy checking was indulged in. The puck hardly ever got within shooting distance of the Napanee goal, while Deseronto goal was in jeopardy throughout. Napanee scored 6 goals in the first half and 7 in the second, to say nothing of the goals not allowed. Deseronto, although laboring hard, couldn't succeed in getting the puck down near enough for manager Ham, who stood in the goal patiently and expectantly all evening, to have a chance to warm himself by getting a "swipe" at it.

A SWIFT GAME.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather a large crowd congregated at the rink on Monday evening to witness the Napanee Hockey Club trim the Trenton team to the tune of 5 goals to 0. From the reputation that preceded the Trenton club everyone expected a hard and fast game and no one was disappointed. The match from start to finish was a swift and scientific exposition of the game and the score is no criterion of the respective merits of the teams. Although hard and close checking was indulged in throughout, the game was free from undue roughness and objectionable plays, and both on and off the ice the Trenton aggregation conducted themselves like gentlemen. In response to the referee's whistle the teams lined up as follows:

NAPANEE.		TRENTON.
Jno. Ham,	goal	W. Nolan,
W. Ponton,	point	H. Armstrong
F. S. Rockwell,	cover point	Bert McAuley
W. Rockwell,	Forwards	H. Filson,
H. Ward,		F. Filson,
Geo. Harrison		Geo Nolan,
C. Trimble,		H. Moore,

Referee: Frank McKeown, Belleville.

The game started amid a blinding snow storm and while it lasted it was extremely difficult to follow the puck. Fortunately the snow ceased about ten minutes after the game started but as it left the ice with about a quarter of an inch of snow on it, the forwards had lots of work mapped out for them during the first half. Napanee assumed the aggressive from the start and the puck was in the immediate vicinity of the Tredton goal throughoutthe first half. Occasionally the Trenton forwards would capture the puck and make a rush which looked dangerous but they couldn't succeed in passing Napanee's stonewall defence. The first goal was scored by Trimble for Napanee after about 15 minutes play. Harrison followed suit shortly afterwards, and a few minutes before half time W. Rockwell did the trick, this leaving the score 3 to 0 at the end of the first half. During the intermissiou the ice, which was in an excellent shape, was cleaned of snow, and both sides went to work in vigorous fashion. In the first part of the second half Trenton made it decidedly interesting for Napanee, but when Napanee's plucky forward line settled down they kept the puck hovering around the Trenton goal in an exasperating manner. Shot af er shot was rained in npon the Trenton goal keeper in rapid succession, all but two of which the eagle eyed, nimble limbed young man who stands between the posts for Trenton returned with charming sang froid. These were two hot shots sent in by W. Rockwell and the umpire's hand went up on each occasion and the score stood 5 to 0 in Napanee's favor. Napanee's forward line is A No. 1, and by their swift and accurate passing Rockwell, Ward, Harrison and Trimble covered themselves with glory and if they keep on in the good work the Corby Cup will hibernate in Napanee without a doubt. The boys play an excellent combination game and their passiug and shooting is marked by rare good judgment. Captain Ferd Rockwell at cover point was a tower of strength and always succeeded in checking his man. There are very few men can pass Ferdy and take the puck with them. Ponton at point and Ham in goal had very little to do, but when occasion demanded it they were not found wanting. The Napanee club entertained the Trenton boys to an oyster supper at the Paisley at the conclusion of the match. About 25 sat down to the spread which was gotten up in mine host Douglas' best style. A most enjoyable time was spent by all present, and the Trenton boys are loud in their praise of the treatment accorded them by the Napanee boys.

An exchange which is evidently strongly opposited to profanity says: "Profanity is a relic of barbarism and a gross insult to decency. It places men in the lowest society and robs them of all self respect. It takes neither brains nor common sense to swear, and generally speaking the less the brain the profaner the man." Young and old men who have contracted the disgusting habit of profanity should commit this to memory.

Lonsdale was the scene of a destructive fire on the 7th inst. The store of Dennis Hayes was, with all its contents, completely destroyed by fire, together with two adjoining buildings. It is thought that burglars were the cause of the conflagration, and that they gained access to the building at the rear, robbed the till and fired the building. Mr. Hays' loss is placed at $4,500, with an insurance of $2,000. Mr. Kimmerly's harness shop was also destroyed.

HE BOUGHT FIVERS.

How Mrs. Loveydovey's Castle in the Air Collapsed.

"Dearie," said Mrs. Loveydovey, looking up from the woman's page, "I have just read an account of a man who gave up smoking 25-cent cigars and was able, in consequence, to buy his wife the handsomest sealskin to be had. It was frightfully interesting."

"Was it?" inquired Mr. Loveydovey lazily, opening one eye. "In what way was it interesting?"

"Oh (petulantly), don't be so stupid! It was interesting because she—er—got the sealskin."

"That so?" yawned Mr. oveydovey. And he closed an eye again.

"Dearie!" ejaculated Mrs. Loveydovey in another minute or two. "Now I know you're not asleep. Listen to me. You smoke 25-cent cigars, don't you?"

"Oh, yes, sometimes."

"Frequently, don't you?"

"Well, yes, frequently."

"Then just think!" said Mrs. Loveydovey blithely, "if you gave up smoking them you could buy me a sealskin."

"I'm afraid not, my dear."

"Oh, nonsense. How many do you smoke a day?"

"Sometimes one, sometimes two, sometimes three, sometimes four. It depends."

"Four a day," said Mrs. Loveybovey conclusively. "Think of that. That is a dollar a day. Why, in less than a year you would have saved over $300. That would buy me a beauty. Now, dearie, I want you to start in right away, and—"

"The fact is, my dear," interrupted Mr. Loveydovey, opening both his eyes this time, "—"

"You can't argue it out with me, Mr. L."

"Perhaps not. But as I was going to say, the only time I ever smoke 25-cent cigars is—"

He bit the end off a choice perfecto as he spoke—"when they are given to me."

As the train backed up one brakeman yelled to the other: "Jump into her as she comes by, run her down behind the coal chute and cut her in two and bring the head end up to the depot" It is said that the young lady jumped up and down and yelled as loud as she could.

Hundreds of letters were sent in by saved men and women who were truly plucked from the grave and saved to anxious relatives and friends. In thankful, burning words the young and old admitted that without Paine's Celery Compound their cases would have been quite hopeless.

Surely, poor sufferer, this is sufficient proof that Paine's Celery Compound is able to meet your case, even though it be serious and desperate—able to give you the new life you so much desire. Try it once; a bottle or two will work wonders.

"It is not a matter to be trifled with, but one that requires prompt and immediate action. Shall we stand in our own light—stagnate and die by inches, or shall we awaken to our surroundings, reach out for more trade and business and become a prosperous and great people."

Our advice to the good people of Tweed is to reach out and help themselves by all means. The News thinks that the promotion of this road would be of great value to Napanee. It says:

"Napanee would also gain the advantages of being connected with such a vast and wealthy country, which would have a ten
